

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. PART II.

CHAPTER I.

RIGHTS OF MAN.

F.

BUT your Dialogue, and your Politics, and your bitter Notes—

H.

Cantantes, my dear Burdett, minus via lædit.

F.

Cantantes, if you please; but hawling out the Rights of Man, they say, is not singing.

H.

To the ears of man, what music sweeter than the Rights of man?

VOL. II.

F.

Yes. Such music as the whistling of the wind before a tempest. You very well know what these gentlemen think of it. You cannot have forgotten

"Sir, Whenever I hear of the word RIGHTS, I have learned to consider it as preparatory to some desolating doctrine. It seems to me, to be productive of some wide spreading ruin, of some wasting desolation."—Canning's Speech.

And do you not remember the enthusiasm with which these sentiments were applauded by the House, and the splendid rewards which immediately followed this declaration? For no other earthly merit in the speaker that Œdipus himself could have discovered.

H.

It is never to be forgotten. Pity their ignorance.

F.

Punish their wickedness.

H.

We shall never, I believe, differ much in our actions, wishes or opinions. I too say with you—Punish the wickedness of those mercenaries who utter such atrocities: and do you, with me, pity the ignorance and folly of those regular governments who reward them: and who do not see that a claim of RIGHTS by their people, so far from treason or sedition, is the strongest avowal they can make of their subjection: and that nothing can more evidently shew the natural disposition of mankind to rational obedience, than their invariable use of this word RIGHT, and their perpetual application of it to all which they desire, and to every thing which they deem excellent.

F.

I see the wickedness more plainly than the folly; the consequence staring one in the face: for, certainly, if men can claim no RIGHTS, they cannot justly complain of any wrongs.

H.

Most assuredly. But your last is almost an identical proposition; and you are not accustomed to make such. What do you mean by the words RIGHT and WRONG?

F.

What do I mean by those words? What every other person means by them.

H.

And what is that?

F.

Nay, you know that as well as I do.

. H.

Yes. But not better: and therefore not at all.

F.

Must we always be seeking after the meaning of words?

H.

Of important words we must, if we wish to avoid important error. The meaning of these words especially is of the greatest consequence to mankind; and seems to have been strangely neglected by those who have made the most use of them.

F.

The meaning of the word RIGHT?—Why—It is used so variously, as substantive, adjective, and adverb; and has such apparently different significations (I think they reckon between thirty and forty), that I should hardly imagine any one single explanation of the term would be applicable to all its uses.

We say—A man's RIGHT.

A RIGHT conduct.

The RIGHT road.

To do RIGHT.

To be in the RIGHT.

To have the RIGHT on one's side.

The RIGHT hand.

RIGHT itself is an abstract idea: and, not referring to any sensible objects, the terms which are the representatives of abstract ideas are sometimes very difficult to define or explain.

H.

Oh! Then you are for returning again to your convenient abstract ideas; and so getting rid of the question.

F.

No. I think it worth consideration. Let us see how Johnson handles it. He did not indeed acknowledge any RIGHTS of the people; but he was very clear concerning Ghosts and Witches, all the mysteries of divinity, and the sacred, indefeasible, inherent, hereditary RIGHTS of Monarchy. Let us see how he explains the term.

Rіснт---

RIGHT-

Rіснт---

No. He gives no explanation *: -Except of RIGHT hand.

^{*} Johnson is as bold and profuse in assertion, as he is shy and

H.

How does he explain that?

F.

He says, RIGHT hand means—" Not the Left."

H.

You must look then for LEFT hand. What says he there?

F.

He says—LEFT—" sinistrous, Not right."

H.

Aye. So he tells us again that RIGHT is—" Not wrong," and wrong is—" Not right *."

But seek no further for intelligence in that quarter; where nothing but fraud, and cant, and folly is to be found

Again, that it means—" passing true judgment," and—" passing a judgment according to the truth of things." Again, that it means—" Happy." And again, that it means—" Perpendicular." And again, that it means—" In a great degree."

All false, absurd, and impossible.

- * Our lawyers give us equal satisfaction. Say they—" DROIT est, ou lun ad chose que fuit tolle d'auter per Tort; le challenge ou le claim de luy que doit aver ceo, est terme DROIT."
- "RIGHT is, where one hath a thing that was taken from another wrongfully; the challenge or claim of him that ought to have it, is called RIGHT."—Termes de la Ley.

[See how Dr. Taylor sweats, in his chapter of LAW and RIGHT, in his Elements of Civil Law.

"Jus is an equivocal word, and stands for many senses according to its different use and acceptation. Some lawyers reckon up near forty. From whence it follows that the Emperor and his lawyers, who begin their works with definition, would have done better, if they had proceeded more philosophico, and distinguished before they had defined.

RIGHT is no other than RECT-um (Regitum), the past participle of the Latin verb Regere*. Whence in Italian you have RITTO; and from Dirigere, DIRITTO, DRITTO:

"Therefore in this great ambiguity of signification, what relief can be expected, must be had from the most simple and natural distribution; and this is what I am endeavouring."

Taylor's Elements of Civil Law, page 40.

- "JURI operam daturam, prius nosse oportet, unde nomen JURIS descendat."—Ib. pag. 55.
- "Jus generale est: sed Lex juris est species. Jus ad non scripta etiam pertinet, Leges ad Jus scriptum." So says Servius, ad Virg. 1. Æn. 511. In this Dr. Taylor thinks Servius mistaking. I think the Doctor greatly mistaking, and Servius a good expositor.]
- * It cannot be repeated too often, that, in Latin, G should always be pronounced as the Greek Γ ; and C as the Greek K. If Regere had been pronounced in our manner, i. e. Redjere; its past participle would have been Redjitum, Retchtum, not Rectum. And if Facere, instead of Fakere, had been pronounced Fassere; its past participle would have been Fassitum, Fastum; not Fakitum, Faktum.
- [XEIP, MANUS. Xeip-eiv—Xeip-epe, i. e. Ger-ere. Rem, or Res-gerere, Re-gerere—Re-gere. So Gerere—Gessi—Re-gessi, Regsi, Rexi.

- "MANUS (says Dr. Taylor) is generally taken for power or authority, for an absolute, despotic, or unlimited controul. So Cicero (pro Quintio)—'Omnes quorum in alterius MANU vita posita est, sæpius illud cogitant, quod possit is, cujus in DITIONE et POTES-

- TATE sunt, quam quid debeat, facere.' And Seneca (iii Controv.)
 —' Nemo potest alium in sua MANU habere, qui ipse in aliena est.' To bring home the word therefore, and to our purpose, MANUS, when applied to government, is that arbitrary kind of administration, which depends rather upon the will of one, than the consent of many."—Taylor's Elements of Civil Law, pag. 6.]
- * This important word RECTUM is unnoticed by Vossius. And of the etymology of JUSTUM he himself hazards no opinion. What he collects from others concerning Rego and Jus, will serve to let the reader know what sort of etymology he may expect from them on other occasions.
- "REGO, et Rex (quod ex Regis contractum) quibusdam placet esse a ρεζω, id est, facio. Isidorus Regem ait dici a recte agendo. Sed hæc Stoica est allusio. Nam planum est esse a Rego. Hoc Caninius et Nunnesius non absurde pro Rago dici putant: esseque id ab αρχω, κατα μεταθεσιν. Sed imprimis assentio doctissimo Francisco Junio, qui suspicatur REGO, omniaque ejus conjugata, venire a nomine RAC, quod Babyloniis Regem notabat. &c.
- "Jus forense a juvando aut jubendo dici putant. Alii jus quidem culinarium a juvando deducunt; forense autem a jubendo. Recentiores quidam mirificas originationes commenti sunt. Sane Franciscus Conanus jus civile dici ait a juxta; quia juxta legem sit, et ei adæquetur et accommodetur, veluti sum regulm: quod etiam etymon adfert Jod. de Salas. At Galeotus Martius et Franciscus Sanctius tradunt, Jus prima sua significatione signare olera aut pultem: sed quia in conviviis pares unicuique partes dabantur, ideo metaphorice Jus vocatum, quod suum unicuique tribuit. Scipio Gentilis scribit—cum prisci in agris viverent, smpeque infirmiores opprimerentur a potentioribus, eos qui afficerentur, ad misericordiam excitandam 100 100 solitos exclamare. Vult igitur ab 100, Jous (ut veteres loquebantur) dictum esse; quia infirmiores nil misi Jus cupiant atque expostulent.

In the same manner our English word Just is the past participle of the verb jubere *.

DECREE, EDICT, STATUTE, INSTITUTE, MANDATE, PRE-CEPT, are all past participles.

F.

What then is LAW?

H.

In our antient books it was written Laugh, Lagh, Lage, and Ley; as Inlaugh, Utlage, Hundred-Lagh, &c.

[&]quot;Alteram quoque ετυμολογιαν idem adfert; ut a Jove sit JUS; quemadmodum Græcis δικη (ut aiunt) quasi Διος κουρη, Jovis filia. Sane verisimilior hæc etymologia, quam prior; quam et ii sequuntur, qui 1005 dici volunt quasi Jovis Os; quia nempe id demum justum sit, quod Deus sit profatus."

^{* [&}quot; Quod si populorum JUSSIS, si principum decretis, si sententiis judicum JURA constituerentur."—Cicero de Leg. lib. 1.5.

Ibid. 1. 16.

[&]quot;The old Romans used IUSA [i. e. Iussa] for what we now write JURA. Quinctilian, 1—7, says the same. See Dr. Taylor, Civil Law, page 42.

[&]quot;Nel principio del mondo, sendo li habitatori rari vissono un tempo dispersi à similitudine delle bestie: dipoi multiplicando la generazione, si ragunorno insieme, et per potersi meglio difendere, cominciarno a riguardare fra loro, quello che fusse più robusto et di maggior' cuore, et fecionlo come capo, et l'obedivano. Da questo nacque la cognizione delle cose honeste et buone, differenti dalle pernitiose et ree: perchè veggendo che se uno noceva al suo benefattore, ne veniva odio et compassione tragli huomini, biasmando gli ingrati et honorando quelli che fussero grati, et pensando ancora che quelle medesime ingiurie potevano essere fatte a loro; per fuggire simile male, si riducevano a fare leggi, ordinare punizioni a chi contra facesse; donde venne la cognizione della Justitia."—Macchiavelli, Discorsi sopra Tito Livio, lib. 1. cap. 2.]

It is merely the past tense and past participle Laz or Læz*, of the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon verb AATGAN, Leczan, ponere: and it means (something or any thing, Chose, Cosa, Aliquid) Laid down—as a rule of conduct.

Thus, When a man demands his RIGHT; he asks only that which it is Ordered he shall have.

A RIGHT conduct is, that which is Ordered.

A RIGHT reckoning is, that which is Ordered.

A RIGHT line is, that which is Ordered or directed— (not a random extension, but) the shortest between two points.

The RIGHT road is, that Ordered or directed to be pursued (for the object you have in view) †.

To do RIGHT is, to do that which is Ordered to be done.

To be in the RIGHT is, to be in such situation or circumstances as are Ordered.

To have RIGHT or LAW on one's side is, to have in one's favour that which is Ordered or Laid down.

A RIGHT and JUST action is, such a one as is Ordered and commanded.

A just man is, such as he is commanded to be—qui Leges Juraque servat‡—who observes and obeys the things Laid down and commanded.

Spenser's Faerie Queene, booke 1. canto 10. stanza 10.]

^{+ [&}quot; All keepe the broad high way, and take delight With many rather for to goe astray,
And be partakers of their evill plight,

The RIGHT hand is, that which Custom and those who have brought us up have Ordered or directed us to use in preference, when one hand only is employed: and the LEFT hand is, that which is Leaved, Leav'd, Left; or, which we are taught to Leave out of use on such an occasion. So that LEFT, you see, is also a past participle.

F.

But if the laws or education or custom of any country should order or direct its inhabitants to use the LEFT hand in preference; how would your explanation of RIGHT other than our ancestors' past participle Læz. But this intimation (though in its proper place here) comes before the reader can be tipe for it.

In the mean time he may, if he pleases, trifle with Vossius, concerning Lex:

"Lex, ut Cic. 1 de Leg. et Varro, v. de L. L. testantur, ita dicta; quia Legi soleat, quo omnibus innotescat. Sunt quibus a Legendo quidem dici placeat; sed quatenus Legere est Eligere. Augustinus, sive alius, in quæst. Novi Testam. 'Lex ab Electione dicta est, ut e multis quod eligas sumas.' Aliqui etiam sic dici volunt, non quia populo Legeretur, cum ferretur:—quod verum etymon putamus:—sed quia scriberetur, Legendaque proponeretur. At minime audiendus Thomas, quæst. xc. art. 1. ubi LEGEM dici ait a Ligando. Quod etymon plerique etiam Scholasticorum adferunt."

The Greek words Noμoς and Θεσμος have similar derivations from Nεμω, rego; and Τιθημι, pono.

In page 147, Dr. Taylor says—" LEX, in the large idea of it, includes every law enacted by a proper authority, and is applicable to the Law of Nature, as well as the Civil Law; and to customary, or unwritten law, with the same propriety, as to written. It means

" — With blade all burning bright

Did fall to ground."—Faerie Queene, booke 1. canto 8. st. 10.

After which he tells us, in the 17th and 18th stanzas, that this same giant,

"— all enraged with smart and frantick yre,
Came hurtling in full fiers, and forst the knight retyre.
The force, which wont in two to be disperst,
In one alone LEFT hand he now unites,
Which is through rage more strong than both were erst."

Faerie Queene, booke 1. canto 8. st. 18.

This force in the LEFT hand, after the LEFT arme had been smitten off, puzzled the editors of Spenser; accordingly in four editions, RIGHT hand is substituted for LEFT.

On this last passage Mr. Church says,—"So the first and second editions, the folio of 1609, and Hughes's first edition, read: which is certainly wrong; for it is said, st. 10,

' He smott off his LEFT arme'—

I read with the folios 1611, 1679, and Hughes's second edition, —RIGHT HAND."

On which Note Mr. Todd says,—" Mr. Church, I believe, has followed too hastily the erring decision of those editions which read—RIGHT HAND. The poet means LEFT as a participle: the giant has now but one single hand LEFT; in which, however, he unites the force of two. Mr. Upton's edition, and Tonson's of 1758, follow the original reading—In one alone LEFT hand."

Mr. Todd has well explained the meaning of the passage; but is not at all aware that LEFT is equally a participle in both its applications.

But Mr. Todd no where shows himself a Conjurer.]

^{* [}In the 8th canto of the 1st book of the Faerie Queen, Spenser in the 10th stanza tells us, that Arthur, in his combat with the giant, "smott off his LEFT arme."

F.

Surely the word RIGHT is sometimes used in some other sense. And see, in this Newspaper before us*, M. Portalis, contending for the Concordat, says—"The multitude are much more impressed with what they are commanded to obey, than what is proved to them to be RIGHT and JUST." This will be complete nonsense, if RIGHT and JUST mean Ordered and commanded.

H.

I will not undertake to make sense of the arguments of M. Portalis. The whole of his speech is a piece of wretched mummery employed to bring back again to France the more wretched mummery of Pope and Popery. Writers on such subjects are not very anxious about the meaning of their words. Ambiguity and equivocation are their strong holds. Explanation would undo them.

F.

Well, but Mr. Locke uses the word in a manner hardly to be reconciled with your account of it. He says—"God has a RIGHT to do it, we are his creatures."

H.

It appears to me highly improper to say, that God has a right: as it is also to say, that God is just. For nothing is Ordered, directed or commanded concerning God. The expressions are inapplicable to the Deity; though they are common, and those who use them have the best intentions. They are applicable only to men; to whom alone language belongs, and of whose sensations only ^{*} Morning Chronicle, Monday, April 12, 1802.

Words are the representatives; to men, who are by nature the subjects of Orders and commands, and whose chief merit is obedience.

F.

Every thing then that is Ordered and commanded is RIGHT and JUST!

H.

Surely. For that is only affirming that what is Ordered and commanded, is—Ordered and commanded †.

F.

Now what becomes of your vaunted RIGHTS of man? According to you, the chief merit of men is obedience: and whatever is Ordered and commanded is RIGHT and JUST! This is pretty well for a Democrat! And these have always been your sentiments?

H.

Always. And these sentiments confirm my democracy.

F.

These sentiments do not appear to have made you very conspicuous for obedience. There are not a few passages, I believe, in your life, where you have opposed what was

What Ariosto fabled of his horses, is true of mankind:

^{+ [}Dr. Taylor, in his Elements of Civil Law, erroneously condemns Ulpian's Definition of the Law of Nature. The Doctor's error springs from his not having been aware of the meaning of the words JUS, RECTUM, LEX.

[&]quot;JUS naturale est quod Natura omnia animalia docuit." Digest, book 1. tit. 1. law 1. parag. 3.

Ordered and commanded. Upon your own principles, was that RIGHT?

H.

Perfectly.

F.

How now! Was it Ordered and commanded that you should oppose what was Ordered and commanded? Can the same thing be at the same time both RIGHT and WRONG?

H.

Travel back to Melinda, and you will find the difficulty most easily solved. A thing may be at the same time both RIGHT and WRONG, as well as RIGHT and LEFT*. It may be commanded to be done, and commanded not to be done. The LAW, Læz, Laz, i.e. That which is Laid down, may be different by different authorities.

I have always been most obedient when most taxed with disobedience. But my RIGHT hand is not the RIGHT hand of Melinda. The RIGHT I revere is not the RIGHT adored by sycophants; the Jus vagum, the capricious command of princes or ministers. I follow the LAW of God (what is Laid down by him for the rule of my conduct) when I follow the LAWS of human nature; which, without any human testimony, we know must proceed from

In an action for damages the Counsel pleaded,—" My client was travelling from Wimbledon to London: he kept the LEFT side of the road, and that was RIGHT. The plaintiff was travelling from London to Wimbledon: he kept the RIGHT side of the road, and that was WRONG."

[&]quot;The rule of the road is a paradox quite.
In driving your carriage along,
If you keep to the LEFT, you are sure to go RIGHT;
If you keep to the RIGHT, you go WRONG."

God: and upon these are founded the RIGHTS of man, or what is ordered for man. I revere the Constitution and constitutional LAWS of England; because they are in conformity with the LAWS of God and nature: and upon these are founded the rational RIGHTS of Englishmen. If princes or ministers or the corrupted sham representatives of a people, order, command, or lay down any thing contrary to that which is ordered, commanded or laid down by God, human nature, or the constitution of this government; I will still hold fast by the higher authorities. If the meaner authorities are offended, they can only destroy the body of the individual; but can never affect the RIGHT, or that which is ordered by their superiors *.

CHAPTER II.

OF ABSTRACTION.

F.

WELL, Well. I did not mean to touch that string which vibrates with you so strongly: I wish for a different sort of information. Your political principles at present are as much out of fashion as your clothes.

H.

I know it. I have good reason to know it. But the fashion must one day return, or the nation be undone. For without these principles, it is impossible that the individuals of any country should long be happy, or any society prosperous.

F.

I do not intend to dispute it with you. I see evidently that, not He who demands RIGHTS, but He who abjures them, is an Anarchist. For, before there can be any thing RECT-um, there must be Reg-ens, Reg's, Rex*,

^{*} The following lines have more good sense than metre:

i. e. Qui or Quod Reg-it. And I admire more than ever your favourite maxim of—Rex, Lex loquens*; Lex, Rex mutus. I acknowledge the senses he has given us—the experience of those senses—and reason (the effect and result of those senses and that experience)—to be the assured testimony of God: against which no human testimony ever can prevail. And I think I can discover, by the help of this etymology, a shorter method of determining disputes between well-meaning men, concerning questions of RIGHT: for, if RIGHT and JUST mean ordered and commanded, we must at once refer to the order and command; and to the authority which ordered and commanded.

But I wish at present for a different sort of information. Is this manner of explaining RIGHT and JUST and LAW and DROIT and DRITTO peculiarly applicable to those words only, or will it apply to others? Will it enable us to account for what is called Abstraction, and for abstract ideas, whose existence you deny?

H.

I think it will: and, if it must have a name, it should rather be called subaudition than abstraction; though I mean not to quarrel about a title.

An Attribute — (aliquid) Attribut-um.

Incense — (aliquid) Incens-um.

An Expanse — (aliquid) Expans-um. &c*.

Such words compose the bulk of every language. In English those which are borrowed from the Latin, French, and Italian, are easily recognized; because those languages are sufficiently familiar to us, and not so familiar as our own: those from the Greek are more striking; because more unusual: but those which are original in our own language have been almost wholly overlooked, and are quite unsuspected.

These words, these Participles and Adjectives, not understood as such, have caused a metaphysical jargon and a false morality, which can only be dissipated by etymology. And, when they come to be examined, you will find that the ridicule which Dr. Conyers Middleton has justly bestowed upon the Papists for their absurd

^{*} It will easily be perceived, that we adopt the whole Latin word, omitting only the sequent Latin Article; because we use a precedent Article of our own. For a similar reason we properly say—The Coran, and not the Al-coran.

Something of this sort I can easily perceive; but not to the extent you carry it. I see that those sham deities FATE and DESTINY—aliquid Fatum, quelque chose Destinée—are merely the past participles of Fari and Destiner †.

That CHANCE * (" high Arbiter † " as Milton calls him) and his twin-brother Accident, are merely the

I agree with you that PROVIDENCE, PRUDENCE, INNO-CENCE, SUBSTANCE, and all the rest of that tribe of qualities (in Ence and Ance) are merely the Neuter plurals of the present participles of Videre, Nocere, Stare, &c. &c.

I see besides that ADULT*, APT†, and ADEPT are the past participles of Adoleo and Apio.

That CANT, CHAUNT, ACCENT, CANTO, CANTATA, are the past participles of Canere, Cantare and Chanter.

That the Italian Cucolo, a cuckow, gives us the verb To Cucol, (without the terminating D,) as the common people rightly pronounce it, and as the verb was formerly and should still be written.

"I am cuckolled and fool'd to boot too."

B. and Fletcher, Women pleas'd.

" If he be married, may he dream he 's cuckol'd."

To Cucol, is, to do as the cuckow does: and Cucol-ed, Cucold, Cucold, its past participle, means Cuckow-ed, i. e. Served as the cuckow serves other birds ‡.

[‡] Nothing can be more unsatisfactory and insipid than the labours (for they laboured it) of Du Cange, Mezerai, Spelman, and Menage, concerning this word. Chaucer's bantering etymology is far preferable.

The very discent and ethymology;

A DATE is merely the participle Datum, which was written by the Romans at the bottom of their Epistles.

As DEBT [i. e. Debit] is the past participle of Debere; so DUE is the past participle of Devoir, and VALUE of Valoir.

["Like as (O captaine) this farre seeing art

Junius, Vossius and Skinner were equally wide of the mark.

DITTO (adopted by us together with the Italian method of Bookkeeping), DITTY (in imitation of the Italian verses), BANDITE, BANDETTO, BANDITTI, EDICT, VERDICT, INTERDICT, are past participles of Dicere and Dire.

ALERT (as well as Erect) is the past participle of Erigere, now in Italian Ergere: All'erecta, All'erecta, All'ereta, All'erta.

- "Certum autem est nostrum CUCKOLD, non a Cuculo ortum duxisse: tales enim non Cuculi sunt, sed Curruca: non sua ova aliis supponunt; sed e contra, aliena sibi supposita incubant et fovent."—Skinner.

The whole difficulty of the etymologists, and their imputation upon us of absurdity, are at once removed by observing, that, in English, we do not call them CUCULI, but cuculati (if I may coin the word on this occasion), i. e. We call them not Cuckows but cuckowed.

 1bid. cant. 24. st. 114.

All ercta (by a transposition of the aspirate) became the French Al'herte, as it was formerly written; and (by a total suppression of the aspirate) the modern French Alerte.

S. Johnson says—"ALERT. adj. [Alerte Fr. perhaps from Alacris; but probably from Alacris, according to Art, or rule.]

- "1. In the military sense, on guard, watchful, vigilant, ready at a call.
- "2. In the common sense, brisk, pert, petulant, smart; implying some degree of censure and contempt."

By what possible means can any one extract the smallest degree of censure or contempt from this word? Amyot, at least, had no such notion of it; when he said—" C'est une belle et bonne chose que la prevoyance, et d'estre touiours A l'herte," (Καλον δε ή προνοια και το ασφαλες.) most appositely translating ασφαλες, i. e. not prostrate, not supine, by A l'herte, i. e. I see that Post—aliquid Posit-um (as well as its compounds Apposite, Opposite, Composite, Impost, Compost, Deposit, Depot, Repose, and Pause), however used in English, as substantive, adjective, or adverb,

As—A post in the ground,
A military post,
To take post,
A post under government,
The post for letters,
Post chaise or post horses,
To travel post, is always merely the past participle of Ponere. And thus, in our present situation, intelligence of the landing of an enemy will probably be conveyed by Post: for, whether positis equis, or positis hominibus, or positis ignibus, or positis telegraphs or beacons of any kind; All will be by Posit or by Post.

I agree with Salmasius, Vossius, Ferrarius, and Skinner (though Menage feebly contests it), that POLTROON and Paltry are likewise past participles.

"Iidem imperatores (scil. Valentinianus et Valens) statuerunt flammis ultricibus comburendum eum, qui, ad fugienda sacramenta militiæ, truncatione digitorum damnum corporis expetisset. Multi enim illo tempore, quia necessitate ad bellum cogebantur, præ ignavia sibi Pollices truncabant, ne militarent. Inde Pollice truncos hodieque pro ignavis et imbecillibus dicimus; sed truncata voce Poltrones."

Similar times, similar practices. We too have many POLTROONS in this country; qui sacramenta militiæ fugiunt; for want of rational motive, not want of courage.

In October 1795*, "One Samuel Caradise, who had been committed to the house of correction in Kendal, and there confined as a vagabond until put on board a King's ship, agreeable to the Late Act, sent for his Wife, the evening before his intended departure. He was in a Cell, and she spoke to him through the Iron Door. After which he put his hand underneath, and she with a mallet and chissel, concealed for the purpose, struck off a finger and thumb, to render him unfit for his Majesty's service†."

"To take them both, that it might neither wound."

Such a sentence however, in such a case, has not yet, I believe, been put in execution. For a similar performance now, upon a husband in his Majesty's service—(I submit it to the Attorneys general)—might not a wife, by a still Later Act, be condemned to death for this new method of seduction? Or will a new Statute be necessary (it would soon be made, and may be expected) flammis ultricibus comburendum eum—et eam.

MINŪTE and a MINŬTE, of Minuere.

There was antiently in our language a MINUTE of money, as well as a MINUTE of time; and its value was half a Farthing.

 - "Tpezen rtýcas, dat ir, reondunz peninzer."
 - " Duo stycæ, id est, quadrans denarii."

So that a FARTHING is also a participle, and means merely Fourthing, or dividing into four parts*.

And, as there was a minute of money as well as a minute of time; so was there also a farthing of land, as well as a farthing of money.

In our antient Law books a Farding-deale of land, means the fourth part of an acre. Whose rent was, in Richard the second's time, so restrained, that for a Farding-deale of land they paid no more than one penny.—Walsingham, pag. 270.

H.

IT gives me pleasure that you have so far noticed this, in the words which we have adopted from the Greek, Latin, Italian and French: for you will be inclined the more readily to concur with me, that the same thing is equally observable in those words which are original in our own language. Thus—

Brand—in all its uses, whether Fire-brand, or a brand of infamy (i. e. Stigma, itself a participle of $\Sigma \tau \iota \zeta \omega$) or brand-new, (i. e. newly burned,) is merely the past participle Bren-ed, Bren'd*, of the verb To Bren; which we now write To Burn.

Sir T. More wrote the word indifferently Bren and Burn.—"At St. Waleries here in Picardy there is a faire abbey, where saint Walery was monke. And upon a furlonge of, or two, up in a wood is there a chapel, in which the saint is specially sought unto for the Stone; not only in those partyes, but also out of England. ODD—Is the participle Owed, Ow'd. Thus, when we are counting by couples or by pairs; we say—One pair, two pairs, &c. and one Owed, Ow'd, to make up another pair. It has the same meaning when we say—An odd man, or an odd action: it still relates to pairing; and we mean—without a fellow, unmatched, not such another, one Owed to make up a couple.

"So thou that hast thy loue sette unto God,
In thy remembraunce this emprint and graue,
As he in soueraine dignitie is ODDE,
So will he in loue no parting felowes haue."
Sir T. More's Workes. Rules of Picus, pag. 28.

HEAD—Is Heaved, Heav'd, the past participle of the verb To Heave: (As the Anglosaxon Deapod was the past participle of Deapan) meaning that part—(of the body—or, any thing else) which is Heav'd, raised, or lifted up, above the rest *.

In Edward the third's time, it was written Heved.

Loud—is the past participle of the verb To Low, or To Bellow (Dlopan, Behlopan) Lowed, Low'd. To Bellow, (i. e. To Be-low) differs no otherwise from To Low, than as Besprinkle differs from Sprinkle, &c. What we now write Loud, was formerly, and more properly, written Low'd.

Skinner mistakingly says—"LOWD, melius LOUD, ab A. s. "Dlub."—Not perceiving that Dlub is the past participle of Dlopan: and Skinner's authority perhaps contributed to mislead those who followed him, to alter the spelling to LOUD.

SHRED Teach of them the past participle of the verb SHERD Teynan, To Sheer, or to cut off: thus, Shered, Sh'red: Shered, Shered.

FIELD.—This word, by Alfred, Gower, Chaucer, &c., was always written pelo, Feld. It is merely the past participle Felled, Fell'd, of the verb To Fell, (pællan, bepællan); and is so universally written Feld by all our old authors, that I should be ashamed to produce you many instances. FIELD-land is opposed to Wood-land; and means—Land where the trees have been Felled.

Thus robbery goth to seke

CUD.—To chew the CUD, i. e. To chew the Chew'd. This change of pronunciation, and consequently of writing, from CH to K and from K to CH, is very common and frequent in our language; and you will have more than one occasion hereafter to notice what obscurity, difficulties and errors it has caused to our etymologists.

DASTARD—i. e. Territus, the past participle of daythingan, adapthizan, Terrere. Dastriged, Dastriyed, Dastried, Dastred, Dastr'd.

Coward—i. e. Cowred, Cowered, Cower'd. One who has cower'd before an enemy. It is of the same import as Supplex.

Junius thinks it is "cow-HERD, Bubulcus."

Some will have it "cow-hearted."

Skinner leaves us to choose amongst

1. CAUDA—" Chi a tutto il suo ardire nella Coda: et. nos dicimus—He has his heart in his heels:—vel q. d.

Culvert (as it is written in the oldest and best French Mss. that I have seen) might easily be corrupted, according to the French mode of pronunciation, into couart and couard."

BLIND.—Blined, Blin'd, is the past participle of the old English verb To Blin (A. S. Blinnan) To Stop *.

By the addition of this example, Mr. Tooke doubtless considered LIN as connected with Blinnan, from which Skinner derives it.— ED.

In the French tongue they use Borgne and Aveugle; but in order to make the same distinction we are compelled to say—Blind of one eye (stopped of one eye) or blind of both eyes, or totally blind, i. e. the sight totally stopped.

In this sense, I suppose, the word Stopped is used in Beaumont and Fletcher's Pilgrim.

"Do you blush at this, in such as are meer rudeness,
That have STOPT souls, that never knew things gentle?
And dare you glorifie worse in yourself?"

Bread—is the past participle of the verb To Bray, (French Broyer,) i. e. To pound, or To beat to pieces: and the subauditum (in our present use of the word Bread) is Corn, or Grain, or any other similar substances, such as Chesnuts, Acorns, &c. or any other Substitutes* which our blessed ministers may appoint for us in this blessed reign.

In consequence of virtual being substitute for real representation; we have innumerable commissioners of different descriptions substitute for our antient Juries: Paper substitute for money: Martial Law substitute for the antient law of the land: Substitutes for the Militia, for an army of Reserve, for Quota-men. But the worst of all these Substitutes (and I fear its speedy recurrence) is a Substitute for BREAD; the harbinger of wide-spreading putre-

To Bray, though now obsolete, was formerly very common in our language.

And whan he comet therat
And sigh his doughter, he to-BRAIDE.
His clothes, and wepende he saide.

Gower, lib. 4. fol. 71. pag. 2. col. 1.

- " Take camomel &c. BRAYE them together &c."

- "The sedes (of sorrell) BRAIED and drunke with wine and water is very holsome agaynst the colyke."
- "What auncient physition is there, that in his workes commendeth not ptysane, whiche is none other than pure barley, BRAIED in a mortar, and sodden in water."
 - "The sedes of melons BRAYED &c."

Castel of Helth, fol. 27. fol. 34. fol. 81.

"I, now it heats. Stand, father, Pound him to dust.

faction, disease, and cruel death. It was attempted not long since (by those who should least have done it) to blast the character of my excellent friend the late Dr. Addington, by (falsely, as I believe) adducing his authority to prove that Bran was more nutritive than Meal: I take this opportunity to rescue his memory from that disgrace; by asserting that he well knew that—" Bread of fine flour of wheat, having no leaven, is slow of digestion and makes slimy humours, but it nourishes much. If it be leavened, it digests sooner. Bread, having much Bran, fills the belly with excrements, and nourishes little or nothing, but shortly descends from the Stomach &c."

And this same doctrine will every intelligent medical man now declare; unless he shall chuse to substitute his interest for his character and conscience.

- "Thou hast made me mad: and I will beat thee dead, Then BRAY thee in a mortar, and new mold thee."
- "I will rectifie and redeem eithers proper inclination, Or BRAY 'em in a morter, and new mold 'em."

B. and Fletcher's Martial Maid.

Sir John Davies (an Attorney General, whom Messrs. Pitt and Dundas have evidently consulted) in a little treatise called—"A Discoverie of the true causes &c."—speaking of Ireland, says——

"Whereupon the multitude, who ever loved to bee followers of such as could master and defend them, admyring the power of the crowne of England, being BRAI'D (as it were) in a mortar, with the sword, famine, and pestilence altogether, submitted themselves to the English government."

F.

Thus it is always with you etymologists. Whilst you chuse your own instances, your explanations run upon all fours; but they limp most miserably, when others quote the passages for you.

H.

I can only give such instances as occur to me. I wish others were to furnish them: and the more hostile they were, the better I should be pleased.

F.

What say you then to this passage in All's well that ends well?

—— "Since Frenchmen are so BRAIDE, Marry that will, I live and die a maid."

Dr. Johnson, Mr. Steevens, and Mr. Malone, are all agreed, that—" BRAID signifies crafty or deceitfull."

H.

I wish you had separated Mr. Steevens (for he has E 2 really done some good service) from the names of such (commentators I cannot call them) as Johnson and Malone. I think however that, upon a little reflection, you will have no difficulty to agree with me, that BRAIDE has here the same meaning that it has in the Proverbs, chap. 27. ver. 20. "Though thou shouldest BRAY a fool in a mortar among wheat with a pestle, yet will not his foolishness depart from him."

The expression here alludes to this Proverb:—Diana does not confine herself merely to his craft or deceit; but includes also all the other bad qualities of which she supposes Bertram to be compounded; and which would not depart from him, though BRAY'D in a mortar.

F.

By the words which you have attempted to explain, Brand, Odd, Head, Wild, Flood, Loud, Shred, Sherd, Field, Cud, Dastard, Coward, Blind and Bread, you seem to have been led to these conjectures by the participial termination ED or 'D. I suppose therefore that the word FIEND, which you lately mentioned, is also a past participle.

H.

No. It is (what I must in conformity with custom call) a present participle; and, for which we now use ing, was in Anglo-Saxon the termination of the participle present: and

FIEND—i. e. FIANAS, riano, the present participle of FIAN, rian, To Hate*, means (subaudi Some one, Any one) Hating. In the same manner,

^{* [}Spa oft spa hi forleton Sone liftendan God Sonne purdon hi zeherzode and to hospe zedonne spam hædenum leodum Se him abutan FRIEND—i. e. ppiano, ppeono, the present participle of ppian, ppeon, To Love, means (subaudi Any one, Some one) Loving *.

"For he no more than the FENDE Unto none other man is FRENDE But all toward hym selfe alone."

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 113. pag. 2. col. 1.

F.

Why do you say that, in conformity with custom, you must call it a present participle?

H.

Because I do not allow that there are any present participles, or any present tense of the verb. But we cannot enter into that question now. A proper time will arrive for it. Nor would I meddle with it at all; but that some foolish metaphysics depend upon it.

F.

There is a word in Shakspeare, ending with a n, which eapbodon. Est sonne hi clipodon on eopnost to Gode mid sospe debbote sonne sende he him sultum suph sumne deman se pissette heopa FEONDUO and hi aliste of heopa YRODE.—Ælfric. de veteri Testamento, pag. 12. L'Isle's Monuments, 4to. 1638.

And he becæhte hig on hædenna handum, and heona FYND rodlice bæroon heona gepeald, and hig spide ge diehton da depiendlica FYND.

—Id. pag. 23.]

The following is the foolish derivation of Menage, which he spells ill to get nearer to his etymology:—"FRIANT de frigente, ablatif de frigens, participe de frigere,—Charles de Bouvelles: FRIANT; id est, delicatus; vel incertæ originis est, vel dictus a verbo Frigo, frigis: a quo Frixuræ, ciborum deliciæ: quod ejusmodi frixuras is amet quem vulgus FRIANT appellat."

It is the same Anglo-Saxon ppiand.

See also Johnson's foolish derivation of Friend from the Dutch.]

has exceedingly troubled all his editors and commentators. I wish much to know whether your method will help us on this occasion. In Troylus and Cressida, Ajax, speaking to Thersites, says (according to the first Folio)

"Speake then, thou whinid'st leauen, speake."

Not knowing what to make of this word Whinid, subsequent editors have changed it to Unsalted. And thus Mr. Malone alters the text, with the Quarto editions,

" Speak then, thou unsalted leaven, speak."

H.

The first Folio, in my opinion, is the only edition worth regarding. And it is much to be wished, that an edition of Shakspeare were given literatim according to the first Folio: which is now become so scarce and dear, that few persons can obtain it. For, by the presumptuous licence of the dwarfish commentators, who are for ever cutting him down to their own size, we risque the loss of Shakspeare's genuine text; which that Folio assuredly contains; notwithstanding some few slight errors of the press, which might be noted, without altering.

This is not the place for exposing all the liberties which have been taken with Shakspeare's text. But, besides this unwarrantable substitution of unsalted for whinid'st, a passage of Macbeth (amongst innumerable others) occurs to me at present, to justify the wish I have expressed.

"Approach thou like the rugged Russian beare, The arm'd rhinoceros, or th' Hircan tiger, Take any shape but that, and my firme nerues Shall neuer tremble. Or be aliue againe, And dare me to the desart with thy sworde, If trembling I Inhabit then, protest mee The baby of a girle."

Pope here changed Inhabit to Inhibit. Upon this correction Steevens builds another, and changes Then to Thee. Both which insipid corrections Malone, with his usual judgment, inserts in his text. And there it stands

" If trembling I inhibit thee."

"The emendation Inhibit (says Mr. Malone) was made by Mr. Pope. I have not the least doubt that it is the true reading. By the other slight but happy emendation, the reading Thee instead of Then, which was proposed by Mr. Steevens, and to which I have paid the respect that it deserved by giving it a place in the text, this passage is rendered clear and easy."

But for these tasteless commentators, one can hardly suppose that any reader of Shakspeare could have found a difficulty; the original text is so plain, easy and clear, and so much in the author's accustomed manner.

--- " Dare me to the desart with thy sworde,

"If I inhabit then"——i. e. If then I do not meet thee there: if trembling I stay at home, or within doors, or under any roof, or within any habitation: If, when you call me to the desart, I then House me, or, through fear, hide myself from thee in any dwelling;

" If trembling I do House me then-Protest me &c."

But a much stronger instance of the importance of such a strictly similar edition (in which not a single letter or supposed misprint should be altered from the original copy) offers itself to me from the two following passages:

"He blushes, and 'tis HIT."

All's well that ends well, pag. 253. col. 1.

Mr. Malone has altered the text to

" He blushes, and 'tis IT."

And he adds the following note;

"The old copy has—'tis HIT.——The emendation was made by Mr. Steevens. In many of our old chronicles I have found HIT printed instead of IT. Hence probably the mistake here."

"Stop up th' accesse and passage to remorse,
That no compunctious visitings of nature
Shake my fell purpose, nor keep peace between Th' effect and HIT."

Macbeth, pag. 134.

Upon this passage Mr. Malone (having again altered the text, from HIT to IT) says,

"The old copy reads—Between the effect and HIT—the correction was made by the editor of the third Folio."

The Correcter and the Adopter deserve no thanks for their mischievous alteration: for mischievous it is; although no alteration can, at first sight, appear more trivial.

I can suppose one probable mischief to have resulted from it to my former castigator, Mr. Burgess,—(I beg his pardon, the present Lord Bishop of St. David's).

It is possible that he may not have seen the first Folio, and may have read only the corrected text of Shakspeare. If so; by this alteration he may have missed one chance of a leading hint; by which, if followed, he might have been enabled to fulfill his undertaking, concerning an explanation of the Pronouns, which he promised: no unimportant part in the philosophy or system of human speech. For I can easily suppose that, with his understanding and industry, (for I have heard a very favourable mention of him, in all respects) he might have been struck with this HIT in Shakspeare: and might, in consequence, have travelled backward; and have found that, not only in our old chronicles, but in all our old English authors, down to the reign of Queen Elizabeth, the word was so written; and that it was not, as poor Malone imagined, any mistake of the Printer.

I must suppose that when he had noticed innumerable such instances, he would then have gone still further back, to our original language: and there he would have found this same word written Dit, Dyt, and Dæt: which might perhaps have plainly discovered to him, that this pronoun was merely the past participle of the verb haltan, Dætan, nominare*. And, upon application,

Knightes Tale, fol. 1. pag. 2. col. 2.

^{* &}quot;And so befel that in the taas they founde Two yonge knyghtes lyeing by and by Both in armes same, wrought full rychely, Of whiche two, Arcyte hight that one, And that other hight Palamon."

Mr. Tyrwhitt in his note upon this word Hight, says, [&]quot;It is difficult to determine precisely what part of speech it is;

he would have found this meaning, viz. nominatum, i. e. The Said, perfectly to correspond with every use of the word it in our language. Having observed this, he would have smiled at our grammatical arrangements; and would not have been in the least shocked to find (as he would often find) the word it used in the following manner,

"The greate kynge, IT whiche Cambyses Was hote." Gower, lib. 7. fol. 158. pag. 1. col. 1.

"When King Arthur had seene them doe all this, hee asked Sir Launcelot what were those knights and that queene. Sir, said Launcelot, I cannot shew you no certaintie, but if Sir Tristram or Sir Palomides. Wit yee well of a certaine IT beene they and la beale Isond."—Historie of Prince Arthur, 3d part, chap. 98.

For he would be well aware, that IT, (or The Said) is (like all our other participles) as much masculine as feminine [or neuter,] and as plurally applicable as singularly *. And from this small inlet, perhaps, (if from but, upon the whole, I am inclined to consider it as a word of a very singular form, a verb active with a passive signification."

It is the same past tense, and therefore past participle of hAITAN; and has the same meaning as HIT or IT.

* [" My powers are cressent, and my auguring hope Sayes IT will come to th' full."

Anthony and Cleopatra, pag. 345. col. 1.

Malone has altered the text, and adopts Theobald's reading and note.

"My power's a crescent," &c.

"What (says Mr. Theobald) does the relative IT belong to? It cannot in sense relate to hope; nor in concord to powers."

"Is your gold and siluer ewes and rams?
I cannot tell, I make IT breede as fast."

Merchant of Venice, pag. 166. col. 2.]

no other quarter) the nature of all the other pronouns might instantly have rushed upon his mind, and have enabled him to perform satisfactorily his contract with the public.

F.

I have often remarked, amongst all our old writers, a similar use of the word THAT; which, as well as IT, is applied by them indifferently to plural nouns and to singular. For instance; in that Traictise you have quoted, by Dr. Martin, (who wrote accurately and was no mean scholar) we meet with such sentences as the following;

- "Patrones elected many into THAT holy ordres, neither of age, nor of learning, nor of discretion, woorthie to take so high a function."—pag. 2.
- "The temporall menne at THAT dayes did much extolle and mayntaine chastitie."—pag. 47.
- "The midwife, christenyng the child, added not THAT solemne wordes, nor any man promised the same for him."—pag. 113.
- "There was a statute or ii deuysed to take away THAT peines of the church, that were before alwaies ordeined and used against maried priestes."—pag. 140.
- "To the entente they might the more fully and frely repose them selues in THAT unspeakable joyes with which Christe feedethe them."—pag. 284.

So, in the Hist. of Prince Arthur, 3d part, chap. 98.

"And so three of them were come home againe, THAT were Sir Gawaine, Sir Ector, and Sir Lionell."

Sir Thomas More uses it in the same manner.

- "This pleasure undoubtedly farre excelleth all THAT pleasures that in this life maie be obteined."—Life of Picus, pag. 12.
 - "THAT euyll aungels the deuilles."—Pag. 386 of his Workes.

Now I have always hitherto supposed this to be a careless and vicious manner of writing in our antient authors*; but I begin to suspect that they were not guilty of any false concord in this application of the word. When treating formerly of the Conjunctions, I remember, you left THAT unexplained. I thought it not very fair at the time; and you gave but a poor reason for the omission. Will you oblige me now, by informing me whether you think the etymology and meaning of THAT will justify this antient use of the word?

H.

In my mind, perfectly. For that (in the Anglo-Saxon Dæt, i. e. Dead, Deat) means Taken, Assumed; being merely the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Dean, Dezan, Dion, WILLAN, Diczan, Dizian; sumere, assumere, accipere; to the, to Get, to Take, to Assume.

It and that always refer to some thing or things, person or persons, Taken, Assumed, or Spoken of before; such only being the meaning of those two words. They may therefore well supply each other's place: as we say indifferently, and with the same meaning, of any action mentioned in discourse; either—" It is a good action;" or, "That is a good action." i. e. The Said (action) is a good action; or, The Assumed (action) is a good action; or, The action, Received in discourse, is a good action.

THE (our Article, as it is called) is the Imperative of the same verb Dean: which may very well supply the place of the correspondent Anglo-Saxon article re, which is the Imperative of reon, videre: for it answers the same purpose in discourse, to say—See man, or, Take man. For instance;

- "THE man THAT hath not musicke in himselfe Is fit for treasons," &c. Or,
- "THAT man is fit for treasons," &c.

Example 1. Exa

This analysed method of speech must, I know, seem strange and aukward to you at first mention; but try it repeatedly, as I have done for years; apply this meaning frequently on every occasion where THE and THAT are used in the language; and I fear not your conviction. But if the experiment should fail, and leave you in the smallest doubt, we will then enter further into the subject: for we must hereafter return to it.

F.

All this may be as you have represented it; and the Bishop perhaps may not be displeased at the intelligence. But you have lost sight of my original question. What say you to this monstrous alteration of unsalted for Whinid'st?

H.

I say, that a man must either have no ears, or very long ears, not to perceive that this was never Shakspeare's language. Metre is not confined to Verse: there is a tune in all good prose; and Shakspeare's was a sweet one. If unsalted is to be adopted instead of Whinid; to keep his tune, you must omit one of the two monosyllables, either then or thou.

In behalf of the word Whinid, Mr. Steevens has well noted that, Francis Beaumont in his letter to Speght, on his edition of Chaucer's works, 1602, says—" Many of Chaucer's words are become, as it were, vinew'd and hoarie with over long lying."

And Mr. Justice Blackstone, on the same side, has observed that—" In the preface to James the first's bible, the translators speak of Fenowed (i. e. Vinew'd or mouldy) traditions."

And Mr. Malone himself acknowledges that—" In Dorsetshire they at this day call cheese, that is become mouldy, Vinny cheese."

F.

But why it is called Whinid, or Vinew'd, or Fenowed, or Vinny, does not any how appear: and its meaning is only to be conjectured from the context, where the word is found. Now I wish to know, whether Whinid is also a participle: and, if a participle, of what verb.

H.

Whind—Vinew'd, Fenowed, Vinny, or rine, is a past participle: and of the verb Fynizean, to corrupt, to decay, to wither, to fade, to pass away, to spoil in any manner. Finie hlar, in Anglo-Saxon is a corrupted or spoiled loaf, whether by mould or any other means. "Direct da da Labanircean zamenlice næddon. And mid zeapliche rape rendon to Iorue. Namon him ealde zercy." and unopulic renud. and rinie hlarar." Joshua, chap. 9. (verses 3, 4, 5).

F.

It seems probable enough: and it is not at all surprising that this Anglo-Saxon verb, rynızean, should have been overlooked; since it has left behind it no other traces of its former existence, but barely this solitary expression.

H.

I beg your pardon: It has left a numerous issue. No European etymologist can do without it. Whither else can he turn, without exposing himself, for the French Faner, Se fener, Evanouir, and Fange; for the Italian

^{* [}Caloe zercý. Old shoes.—Shoe is the past participle of rcýan—ze-rcýan, sub-ponere. Shoe, is, suppositum.]

Affanno, Affannare, and Fango; for the Latin Vanus, and Vanesco; for the German Pfinnig; and for the English FAINT, and FEN; and many other words*, with which I forbear at this time to pester you?

F.

And yet they have done very well without it.

H.

They have done, it is true: How well yourself shall judge.—Junius says—"Faint, languidus, pusillanimus, ignavus, periculo cedens, est a Gallico Feindre, non audere, subducere se discrimini: solent nempe timidi atque imbelles formidinem suam pluribus vanissimorum obtentuum figmentis tegere."

Minshew—"FAINT, a Gallico Faner, a Lat. Vanescere."

Skinner—"FAINT, a Fr. G. Faner, Fener; deficere, deflorescere, flaccescere, emori."

Menage, Orig. Franc.—" Faner, comme ce mot vient de Fænum, quand on le dit dans le sens propre, en parlant d'une prairie que l'on Fane; je crois qu'il en vient pareillement quand il signifie se fletrir, se secher: car comme le foin, quand on le fane, se fletrit et devient pâle; de même on dit, dans le sens figuré, Se Faner, de tout ce qui perd sa premiere couleur, sa beauté, son air vif."

Menage, Orig. Ital.—" AFFANNARE, AFFANNO, Da Afa, che vale quell' affanno cagionato da gravezza d'aria,

"Fango—da Fimus: in questa maniera: Fimus, Fimi, Fimicus, Femcus, Fencus, Fengus, Fangus, Fango: e per metaplasmo Fanga: onde il Francese Fange."

F.

Enough, and too much of this. I will have nothing to do with Afa, voce Ebrea; nor with Fimicus, Fencus, &c. I will rather accept your Anglo-Saxon derivation.——I understand you then to say that faint (as well as Fennowed, &c.) is the past participle of pynizean: yet it does not terminate in ED or 'D.

participle of rapan, To Fare, or To Go. The meaning of this word appears to have been understood by those who introduced the vulgar country custom of saying upon such an occasion,——"And joy Go with you."

Twist—is Twiced, Twic'd, Twist.

Quilt—is Quilled, Quill'd, Quilt.

Want—is Waned, Wan'd, Want, the past participle of Panian, decrescere, To Wane, To fall away.

GAUNT—is Ge-waned, Gewan'd, Gewant, G'want, Gaunt; the past participle of Le-panian, To Wane, to decrease, to fall away. Ge is a common prefix to the Anglo-Saxon verbs. GAUNT was formerly a very common word in English.

"As GANT as a greyhound."—Ray's proverbial Similies.

DRAUGHT—the past participle of Dnazan, To Draugh, (now written To Draw) Draughed, Draugh'd, Draught.

Rent—Rended, Rend'd, Rent; of the verb To Rend.

[——" But thou, viper,
Hast cancell'd kindred, made a RENT in nature."

Dryden. Don Sebastian, act 2. sc. 1.]

Bent—A person's Bent or Inclination. Bended, Bend'd, Bent.

TILT—of a boat or waggon: the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Tilian, i. e. To raise, or to lift up. To Till the ground, is, To raise it, To turn it up. Atilt is well said of a vessel that is raised up; but we ought to say To Till, and not To Tilt a vessel.

- "Many wynter men lyued, and no meate ne TILIDEN."

 Vision of Pierce Ploughman, pass. 15. fol. 72. pag. 2.

What is MALT?

H.

Though now differently pronounced, writand ten, and applied by us, are one and the same Malt, French word Mouillé; the past participle of the verb Mouiller, to wet or to moisten. Mouillé, anglicized, becomes Mouilled, Mouill'd, Mould: then Moult, Malt. Wetting or moistening of the grain is the first and necessary part of the process in making what we therefore well term Malt.

- "He had a cote of christendome as holy kyrke beleueth

EN, as well as ED, is also a common participial termination, and our ancestors affixed either indifferently to any word. Sir Thomas More appears to have had a predilection for EN, and he writes Understanden (Works, vol. 2. p. 550.) whilst his contemporary Bishop Gardner preferred ED, and therefore wrote Understanded: We have deserted both, and now use the past tense Understanded instead of the participle. But will not a final EN or 'N likewise direct us to some of these concealed participles?

H.

Surely, to many. After what we have noticed in Poltroon, Dastard, and Coward, we cannot avoid seeing, that Craven—is one who has craved or craven his life from his antagonist—dextramque precantem protendens.

Leaven—is from the French Lever, to raise; i. e. That by which the dough is raised. So the Anglo-Saxons called it Daren, the past participle of their own verb Dearan, to raise.

HEAVEN—(subaud. some place, any place) Heav-en or Heav-ed.

They say that this word HEUEN in the article of our foyth, ascendit ad coelos, signifieth no certaine and determinat place. Som tyme it signifieth only the suppre place of creatures."

A Declaration of Christe, cap. 8. by Johan Hoper. 1547.

BACON—is evidently the past participle of Bacan, To Bake, or to dry by heat.

- "Our brede was newe BAKEN, and now it is hored, our botels and our wyne weren newe, and now our botels be nygh brusten."

 Diues and Pauper, 2d comm. cap. 20.
- "And there they dranke the wine and eate the venison and the foules BAKEN."—Hist. of Prince Arthur, 1st part. chap. 133.
 - "As Abraham was in the playn
 Of Mamre where he dwelt,
 And BEAKT himselfe agaynst the sunne
 Whose parching heat he felt."
 Genesis, chap. 18. fol. 34. pag. 1. By W. Hunnis. 1578.
 - "Crane, beinge rosted or BAKEN, is a good meate."

 Castel of Helth, fol. 21. pag. 1. By Syr Thomas Elyot.
- "Whosoeuer hath his mynd inwardly ameled, BAKEN, and through fyred with the loue of God."

Lupset's Workes. Of Charite, pag. 5.

BARREN—i. e. Barr-ed, stopped, shut, strongly closed up, which cannot be opened, from which can be no fruit nor issue.

- "God shall make heuen and the ayer aboue the, brasen; and the erthe byneth the, yreny; that is to saye, BAREYNE, for defaute of rayne."—Diues and Pauper, 10th comm. cap. 8.
 - "For God thus plagued had the house Of Bimelech the king, The matrix of them all were STOPT, They might no issue bring."

Genesis. By W. Hunnis.

"For the Lord had fast CLOSED up all the wombs of the house of Abimelech."—Genesis, chap. 20. v. 18.

So, in an imprecation of barrenness, in Beaumont and Fletcher's Woman Hater, act. 5. sc. 2:

"Mayst thou be quickly old and painted; mayst thou dote upon some sturdy yeoman of the Wood-yard, and he be honest; mayst thou be barr'd the lawful lechery of thy coach, for want of instruments; and last, be thy womb unopen'd."

STERN—Ster-en, Ster'n, i. e. Stirr'd. It is the same word and has the same meaning, whether we say—a stern countenance, i. e. a moved countenance, moved by some passion; or the stern of a ship, i. e. The moved part of a ship, or that part by which the ship is moved. It is the past participle of the verb repnan, reman, movere; which we now in English write differently, according to its different application, To Stir, or To Steer. But which was formerly written in the same manner, however applied.

- "The STERNE wynde so loude gan to route
 That no wight other noyse might here."

 Troylus, boke 3. fol. 176. pag. 2. col. 1.
- "There was no more to skippen nor to praunce,
 But boden go to bedde with mischaunce,
 If any wight STERYNG were any where
 And let hem slepen, that a bedde were."

 Ibid. boke 3. fol. 176. pag. 1. col. 2.
- "And as the newe abashed nightyngale
 That stynteth first, whan she begynneth syng,
 Whan that she hereth any heardes tale,
 Or in the hedges any wight STERYNG."

 Ibid. boke 3. fol. 179. pag. 1. col. 2.
- "She fell in a grete malady as in a colde palsey, so ferforth that she myght neyther STERE hande nor fote."

Nychodemus Gospell, chap. 8.

- "Whan I sawe the STERYNGES of the elementes in his passyon, I byleued that he was Sauyour of the worlde."—Ibid. chap. 17.
- "He dyd se as he thought oure blessed lady brynge to hym fayre mylke in a foule cuppe, and STERED hym to ete of it."

 Myracles of our Lady, pag. 10. (1530.)

- "Yf the chylde STEARE not ne moue at suche tyme."

 Byrthe of Mankynde, fol. 15. pag. 2. (1540.)
- "Warne the woman that laboureth to STERE and moue herselfe."—Ibid. fol. 23. pag. 2.
- "I suffre, and other poore men lyke unto me, am many a tyme STERYD to grutche and to be wery of my lyfe."

Dives and Pauper, 1st comm. cap. 1.

- "Yf a man wyll STYRE well a shyp or a bote, he may not stande in the myddes of the shyp, ne in the former ende; but he muste stande in the laste ende, and there he may STYRE the shyp as he wyl.—Ibid. 9th comm. cap. 8.
 - "This bysshop STERITH up afreshe these olde heresies."

 Gardners Decl. against Joye, fol. 25. pag. 1. (1546.)
- "He STERID against himselse great wrath and indignation of God."—Dr. Martin. Of Priestes unlawful Marriages, chap. 8.
 - "It is yourselfes that STEIRE your fleash."—Ibid. chap. 11.
- "Let the husbande geue hys wyfe hir dutie, that is if she craue for it, if they feare otherwise that Sathan wyll STIERE in them the deuileshe desyre to liue incontinentlie."—Ibid. chap. 11.
- "Let hym that is angry even at the fyrste consyder one of these thinges, that lyke as he is a man, so is also the other, with whom he is angry, and therefore it is as lefull for the other to be angry, as unto hym: and if he so be, than shall that anger be to hym displeasant, and STERE hym more to be angrye."

Castel of Helth, by Syr T. E. fol. 63. pag. 1.

- "Rough deeds of rage and STERNE impatience."

 1st Part Henry 6. pag. 11$.
- "The sea, with such a storme as his bare head
 In Hell-blacke night indur'd, would have buoy'd up
 And quench'd the stelled fires.
 Yet, poore old heart, he holpe the heauens to raine.
 If wolues had at thy gate howl'd that STERNE time,
 Thou should'st haue said, good porter turne the key."

 Lear, pag. 300.

- "He that hath the STIRRAGE of my course Direct my sute." Romeo and Juliel, pag. 57.
- "Tread on a worm and she will STEIR her tail."

 Ray's Scottish Proverbs.
- ["Goe we unto th' assault, and selfe instant,
 Before the rest (so said) first doth he STEARE."

 Godfrey of Bulloigne, translated by R. C. Esq.
 Windet 1594. pag. 122. cant. 3. st. 51.
- "His steed was bloody red, and fomed yre,
 When with the maistring spur he did him roughly STIRE."

 Faerie Queene, book 2. cant. 5. st. 2.]

Dawn—is the past participle of Dazian, lucescere.

- "Tyll the daye DAWED these damosels daunced."

 Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 19. fol. 103. pag. 2.
- "In the DAWYNGE and spryngyng of the daye, byrdes begynne to synge."—Dives and Pauper, 1st comm. cap. 28.
 - "And on the other side, from whence the morning DAWS."

 Poly-olbion, song 10.

Born—is the past participle of Beanan, to bear: formerly written bornen, and on other occasions now written borne. Born is, Borne into life or into the world.

BEARN (for a child) is also the past participle of Beapan, to bear; with this only difference: that Born or Bor-en is the past tense Bore with the participial termination En: and BEARN is either the past tense Bare, or the Indicative Bear, with the participial termination En.

For Maris loue of heuen

That BARE the blissful BARNE that bought us on the rode."

Vision of P. P. pass. 3. fol. 8. pag. 1.

[BAD and Good.

press abhorrence, hatred, and defiance, &c. Bayed, Baed, i. e. Bay'd, Ba'd, abhorred, hated, defied, i. e. BAD.

Bayen, Bay'n, Baen, write and pronounce BANE.

Abbaiare, It. Abboyer, Fr. Abbaubare, Lat. &c. Greek, Boxw. When the Italians swarmed in the French court, not being able to pronounce the open sound of Oy or Oi, they changed the o into A; as in Français, Anglais. See Henri Etienne. So also Nivernais. Abayer.

To Ban, i. e. to curse. Bas, Fr. Base.

Ge-owed perhaps Gowed, written and pronounced Good, which the Scotch pronounce and write GUDE.]

Churn—(Chyren, Chyr'n, Chyrn) is the past participle of Lynan, agitare, vertere, revertere, to move backwards and forwards.

YARN—is the past participle of Lyppan, Lypnan, to prepare, to make ready. In Antony and Cleopatra, p. 367.

—"YARE, YARE, good Iras"—is the Imperative of the same verb; the L and z of the Anglo-Saxons, however pronounced by them, being often (indeed usually) softened by their descendants to y.

When Valeria in Coriolanus, page 4, says——"You would be another Penelope: yet they say, all the YEARNE she spun in Ulysses absence did but fill Athica full of mothes."——Yearne (i. e. Yaren) means Prepared (subaud. Cotton, Silk, or Wool) by spinning.

H.

ED and EN are Adjective as well as Participial terminations: for which, by their meaning (for all common terminations have a meaning, nor would they otherwise be common terminations) they are equally qualified. Thus we say——Golden, Brazen, Wooden, Silken, Woolen, &c. and formerly were used Silver-en, Ston-en, Treen-en, Ros-en, Glas-en, &c.

Thei worshipiden not deuelys and symplacris, GOLDUN, 81L-UEREN, and BRASONE, and STONEN, and TREENEN; the whiche nether mown se nether here nether wandre."

In the modern translation,

- "That they should not worship Devils and Idols of gold, and silver, and brass, and stone, and of wood; which neither can see nor hear nor walk."—Apocalips, chap. 9. ver. 20.
- "And I saw as a GLASUN see meynd with fier, and hem that ouercamen the beest and his ymage, and the noumbre of his name stondynge aboue the GLASUN see."

In the modern translation,

- "And I saw as it were a sea of glass mingled with fire: and them that had gotten the victory over the beast, and over his image, and over his mark, and over the number of his name, stand on the sea of glass."—Ibid. chap. 15. ver. 2.
- "Whan Phebus the sonne begynneth to sprede hys clerenesse with ROSEN chariottes."

Chaucer. Boecius, boke 2. fol. 227. pag. 1. col. 1.

"The day the fayrer ledeth the ROSEN horse of the sonne."

Ibid. boke 2. fol. 231. pag. 2. col. 2.

"That er the sonne tomorrowe be rysen newe And er he haue ayen ROSEN hewe."

Chaucer. Blacke Knyght, fol. 291. pag. 1. col. 1.

"In their time thei had TREEN chalices and golden prestes, and now have we golden chalices and TREEN prestes."

Sir T. More's Works. Dialogue &c. pag. 114.

Sir Thomas Rokesby being controlled for first suffering himselfe to be serued in TREENE cuppes, answered—These homely cups and dishes pay truely for that they containe: I had rather drinke out of TREENE, and pay gold and silver, than drinks out of gold and silver, and make wooden payment."

Spenser. Mother Hubberds Tale.]

Our English word BOAR is the Anglo-Saxon Bap, which they pronounced broad as Bawr; and so our Northern countrymen still call it, and formerly wrote it. So they wrote Rar, and pronounced Rawr, what we now write and pronounce Roar.

Bar-en or Bawr-en, Bawr'n, was the antient adjective of Bar, Bawr; and, by the transposition of R, Bawrn has become BRAWN.

Brawn therefore is an Adjective, and means Boar-en or Boar's (subaud.) Flesh.

takes place; as in the Greek Kaçõia and Kçaõia, &c. And the Greeks might as well have imagined these to be two different words, as our etymologists have supposed BOARD and BROAD to be; though there is not the smallest difference between them, except this metathesis of the letter R: the meaning of BOARD and BROAD being the same, though their modern application is different.

F.

Well. Be it so. I think your account of BRAWN has an advantage over Junius and Skinner*: for your journey is much shorter and less embarrassed. But I beg it may be understood, that I do not intirely and finally accede to every thing which I may at present forbear to contest.

Skinner says—"BRAWN, pro Apro, ingeniose deflectit amicus quidam doctissimus a Lat. Aprugna, supple Caro; rejecto initiali A, P in B mutato, G eliso, et A finali per metathesin του U premisso.

ideoque modo coquunt, modo assant, modo frigunt, modo pinsunt. Sed obstat, quod nullo modo verisimile est, nos cibi nobis peculiaris, Belgis aliisque gentibus fere ignoti nomen ab insuetis sumsisse.

"5. Possit et deduci (licet nec hoc plane satisfaciat) ab A.-S. Ban, aper, et nun, contr. pro nunen vel ze-nunnen, concretus, q. d. Barrun (i. e.) pars Apri maxime concreta, pars durissima."

[Note.—To the instances given above of the transposition of the R, as in Gers for Grass, may be added Kerse for Cress:—whence the harmless sayings "Not worth a Kerse" (cress)—"I don't care a Kerse," have been first changed for "I don't care a Curse," &c. and then whimsically metamorphosed into "I don't care a Damn;"—"Not worth a Damn off a common."

CHAPTER IV.

THE SAME SUBJECT CONTINUED.

F.

I SEE the etymological use you would make of the finals D, T, and N. But you said, early in our conversation, that wrong was a past participle, as well as RIGHT; yet wrong does not fall within any of those three classes.

H.

True. It belongs to a much more numerous and less obvious class of participles; which I should have been sorry to enter upon, till you had been a little seasoned by the foregoing.

Wrong—is the past participle of the verb to To Wring, Prinzan, torquere. The word answering to it in Italian is Torto, the past participle of the verb Torquere; whence the French also have Tort. It means merely Wrung, or Wrested from the RIGHT or Ordered—line of conduct.

F.

If it means merely Wrung, the past participle of To Wring, why is it not so written and pronounced? Doctor Lowth, in his account of the English verbs—

. H.

O, my dear Sir, the bishop is by no means for our present purpose. His Introduction is a very elegant little treatise, well compiled and abridged for the object which alone he had in view; and highly useful to Ladies and Gentlemen for their conversation and correspondence; but affording no assistance whatever to reason or the human understanding: nor did he profess it. In the same manner an intelligent tasty milliner, at the court end of the town, may best inform a lady, what the fashion is, and how they wear the things at present; but she can give her little or no account perhaps of the materials and manufacture of the stuffs in which she deals;—nor does the lady wish to know.

The bishop's account of the verbs (which he formed as well as he could from B. Jonson and Wallis) is the most trifling and most erroneous part of his performance. He was not himself satisfied with it; but says—"This distribution and account, if it be just."

He laid down in the beginning a false rule: and the consequent irregularities, with which he charges the verbs, are therefore of his own making.

Our ancestors did not deal so copiously in Adjectives and Participles, as we their descendants now do. The only method which they had to make a past participle, was by adding ED or EN to the verb: and they added either the one or the other indifferently, as they pleased (the one being as regular as the other) to any verb which they employed: and they added them either to the indicative mood of the verb, or to the past tense. Shak-ed or Shak-en, Smytt-ed or Smytt-en, Grow-ed or Grow-en, Hold-ed or Hold-en, Stung-ed or Stung-en, Buyld-ed or Buyld-en, Stand-ed or Stand-en, Mow-ed or Mow-en, Know-ed or Know-en, Throw-ed or Throw-en, Sow-ed or Sow-en, Com-ed or Com-en, &c. were used by them indifferently. But their most usual method of speech was to employ the past tense itself, without participializing it, or making a participle of it by the addition of ED or EN. So like-wise they commonly used their Substantives without adjectiving them, or employing those adjectives which (in imitation of some other languages and by adoption from them) we now employ.

Take as one instance (you shall have more hereafter) the verb To Heave, Dearan.

By adding ED to the Indicative, they had the participle	ed
By changing D to T, mere matter of pronunciation Heaf
By adding EN, they had the participle Heave	:n
Their regular past tense was (Dar, Dor) Hove
By adding ED to it, they had the participle Hove	1
By adding EN, they had the participle Hove

And all these they used indifferently. The ship (or any thing else) was

Heaved or Heav'd Heaft

Heaven

Hove

Hoved or Hov'd

Hoven:

And these have | Heft left behind them | Heaven in our modern language, the suppo- < the diminutive sed substantives,

Head Hoof, Huff, and Hovel. but really unsuspected Participles.

Howve or Hood,
Hat, Hut Haven, Oven.

You will observe that this past tense Dar, Dor, Hove, was variously written, as Heff, Hafe, Howve.

"Whan Lucifer was HEFF in heuen And ought moste haue stonde in euen."

Gower, fol. 92. pag. 2. col. 2.

 Reues Prol. fol. 15. pag. 2. col. 1.
 - N.B. In some copies, it is written Howne.

To set his House or Howne, is equivalent to what the Miller says before,

 Both of a carpenter and hys wyfe,
 Howe that a clerke set a wryghtes cappe."

 Millers Tale, fol. 12. pag. 1. col. 1.

If you should find some difficulties (I cannot think they will be great) to make out to your satisfaction the above derivations; it will be but a wholesome exercise; and I shall not stop now to assist in their elucidation; but will return to the word wrong. I have called it a past participle. It is not a participle. It is the regular past tense of the verb To Wring. But our ancestors used a past tense, where the languages with which we are most acquainted use a participle: and from the grammars of the latter (or distribution of their languages) our present grammatical notions are taken: and I must therefore continue with this word (and others which I shall hereafter bring forward) to consider it and call it a past participle.

In English, or Anglo-Saxon (for they are one language), the past tense is formed by a change of the characteristic letter of the verb. By the characteristic letter I mean the vowel or diphthong which in the Anglo-Saxon immediately precedes the Infinitive termination an, can, ian; or zan, zean, zian.

To form the past tense of Ppingan, To Wring (and so of other verbs), the characteristic letter 1 or y was changed to A broad. But, as different persons pronounced differently, and not only pronounced differently, but also used different written characters as representatives of their sounds; this change of the characteristic letter was exhibited either by A broad, or by o, or by u.

From Alfred to Shakespeare, both inclusively, o chiefly prevailed in the South, and a broad in the North. During the former part of that period, a great variety of spelling appears both in the same and in different writers. Chaucer complains of this.

"And for there is so greate diversyte
In Englyshe, and in writynge of our tonge."

Troylus, boke 5. fol. 200. pag. 1. col. 1.

But since that time the fashion of writing in many instances has decidedly changed to ou and u; and in some, to on and oo and AI.

But, in our inquiry into the nature of language and the meaning of words, what have we to do with capricious and mutable fashion? Fashion can only help us in our commerce with the world to the rule (a necessary one I grant) of Loquendum ut vulgus.

But this same fashion, unless we watch it well, will mislead us widely from the other rule of Sentiendum ut sapientes.

F.

Heretic! What can you set up, in matter of language, against the decisive authority of such a writer as Horace?

Quem penes arbitrium est et jus et norma loquendi."

H.

I do not think him any authority whatever upon this occasion. He wrote divinely: and so Vestris danced. But do you think our dear and excellent friend, Mr. Cline, would not give us a much more satisfactory account of the influence and action, the power and properties of the nerves and muscles by which he performed such wonders, than Vestris could? who, whilst he used them with such excellence, did not perhaps know he had them. In this our inquiry, my dear Sir, we are not poets nor dancers, but anatomists.

F.

Let us return then to our subject.

H.

To the following verbs, whose characteristic letter is 1, the present fashion (as Dr. Lowth truly informs us) continues still to give the past tense in 0.

Abide		A bode	Smite		Smote
Drive		Drove *	Stride		Strode

You will please to observe that the past participles of the above verbs Abide, Drive, Shrive, and Ride, besides the supposed substantives DRIFT, SHRIFT, (which we before noticed) furnish also the following; viz.

ABODE. i. e. Where any one has Abided.

Drove. i. e. Any number of animals Driven.

Shrove—As Shrove-tide. i. e. The time when persons are Shrived or Shriven.

ROAD. i. e. Any place Ridden over. This supposed subtantive ROAD, though now so written, (perhaps for distinction sake, to correspond with the received false notions of language) was formerly written exactly as the past tense. Shakespeare, as well as others, so wrote it.

But, together with the unfashionable Clomb and Chode, the bishop should also have noticed, that by a former (and generally not more distant) fashion, the following verbs also (though now written with A, U, OU, or I short) gave us their past tense in 0*.

F.

Enough, enough. Innumerable instances of the same may, I grant you, be given from all our antient authors. But does this import us any thing?

H.

Surely much: if it shall lead us to the clear understanding of the words we use in discourse. For, as far as we "know not our own meaning;" as far as "our purposes are not endowed with words to make them known;" so far we "gabble like things most brutish." But the importance rises higher when we reflect upon the application of words to Metaphysics. And when I say Metaphysics; you will be pleased to remember, that all general reasoning, all Politics, Law, Morality and Divinity, are merely Metaphysic.

F.

Well. You have satisfied me that Wrong, however written, whether Wrang, Wrong, or Wrung (like the Italian Torto and the French Tort) is merely the past tense (or past participle, as you chuse to call it) of the verb To Wring; and has merely that meaning. And I collect, I think satisfactorily, from what you have said, that Song—i. e. Any thing Singed, Sang, or Sung, is the past participle of the verb To Sing: as Cantus is of Canere, and Ode of acida. That

That

DRUNK—is the past participle of the verb To Drink: and STROKE—of the verb To Strike.

Still this is but a very scanty portion of participles passing for substantives from the verbs in English whose characteristic letter is 1 or y.

H.

Scanty indeed, if these were all: especially if we include, as we ought to do, the numerous verbs which in the Anglo-Saxon have the same characteristic letters. But I will produce enough to you; if you will promise me not to be tired with their abundance.

F.

That is more than I can possibly undertake; but I do engage to let you know it when it happens.

H.

Throng—is the past participle of the verb To Thring. Dpingan, comprimere, constringere.

F.

Thring! Where is that word to be found in English?

H.

In the antient New Testament, in Gower, in Chaucer, in Douglas, and in all our old authors.

" He was THRONGUN of the cumpanye."

Luke, chap. 3. ver. 42.

- "And Ihesu seyth, who is it that touchide me? sotheli alle men denyinge, Petir seide and thei that weren with him. Commaundour, companyes THRYNGEN and tourmenten thee, and thou seist, who touchide me."—Ibid. ver. 45.

STRONG—is the past participle of the verb To String. A strong man is, a man well Strung *.

- "Orpheus, whose sweet harp so musically STRONG, Inticed trees and rocks to follow him along."

 Poly-olbion. song 21.
- "And little wanted, but a woman's heart
 With cries and tears had testified her smart;
 But inborn worth, that fortune can controul,

For I have suffer'd hardships, dash'd and drench'd
By many a wave, nor had I food on board
At all times, therefore am I much UNSTRUNG."

Cowper's translation of Homer's Odyssey, pag. 211.]

Bold—is the past participle of the verb To Build.

Bolt—is the same.—You seem surprised: which does not surprise me; because, I imagine, you are not at all aware of the true meaning of the verb To Build; which has been much degraded amongst us by impostors. There seems therefore to you not to be the least shadow of corresponding signification between the verb and its participle. Huts and hovels, as we have already seen, are merely things Raised up. You may call them habitations, if you please; but they are not Buildings (i. e. Buildens:) though our modern architects would fain make them pass for such, by giving to their feeble erections a strong name. Our English word To Build is the Anglo-Saxon Býloan, to confirm, to establish, to make firm and sure and fast, to consolidate, to strengthen; and is applicable to all other things as well as to dwelling places.

"Amyd the clois undar the heuin all bare
Stude thare that time ane mekle fare altare,
Heccuba thidder with hir childer for BEILD
Ran all in vane and about the altare swarmes.
Bot quhen she saw how Priamus has tane
His armour so, as thoucht he had bene ying;
Quhat fuliche thocht, my wretchit spous and kinge,
Mouis the now sic wappynnis for to weild?

Quhidder haistis thou? quod sche, of ne sic BEILD Haue we now myster, nor sic defendoris as the."

Douglas, booke 2. pag. 56.

Let not the peece of vertue, which is set

Betwixt us as the cyment of our loue

To keepe it BUILDED, be the ramme to batter

The fortresse of it." Antony and Cleopatra, p. 352. col. 1.]

And thus a man of confirmed courage, i. e. a confirmed heart, is properly said to be a Builded, Built, or Bold man; who, in the Anglo-Saxon, is termed Byld, Bylded, Ge-bylded as well as Bald. The Anglo-Saxon words Bold and Bold, i. e. Builded, Built, are both likewise used indifferently for what we now call a Building (i. e. Builden) or strong edifice.

BOLT, as we now apply it, is that by which a door, shutter, &c. is fastened or strengthened.

Drop—Any thing Dripped; the past participle of To Drip. So DRIPPING i. e. DRIPPEN.

Снор—Any thing Chipped; the past participle of the verb To Chip.

PLOT—i. e. Plighted. A plighted agreement; any agreement to the performance of which the parties have plighted their faith to each other.

"Pilgrames and Palmers PLYGHT hem togyther
For to seke S. James and sayntes at Rome."

Vision of P. Ploughman, fol. 1. pag. 2.

PLEDGE—i. e. Pleght: the past participle of the same verb To Plight. The thing Plighted; from the Anglo-Saxon verb Plihtan, Exponere vel objicere periculo, spondere, oppignerare.

SPOT The past participle of the verb To Spit, A.-S. SPOUT Spittan. Spot is the matter Spitten, Spate, VOL. II.

SNOT Is the past participle of the verb To Snite, SNOUT A.-S. Snytan, emungere, To Wipe. Snot the matter Snited or wiped away. Snout the part Snited or wiped.

All these, so variously written, pronounced and applied, have but one common meaning: and are all the past participle, rceat, of the Anglo-Saxon and English verb Scytan, rcitan, To Shite, i. e. projicere, dejicere, to throw, to cast forth, to throw out.

Under the article SHEET, Junius promised—"Variarum vocabuli reat acceptionum exempla, Deo vitam viresque largiente, Lectori suppeditabit lexicon nostrum Anglo-Saxonicum."
But this has not been performed.

The French used formerly this same word in the same general meaning—

"Les autres Nes qui nerent mie cele par guenchies, furent entrees en boche d'Auie; et ce est la, ou li Braz Sain Iorge CHIET en la grant mer."—Ville Hardhuin, edit. 1601. pag. 18.

I have already said, that it is common to all the verbs whose characteristic letter is 1 or Y, to form the past tense in this manner; and our ancestors wrote it ad libitum, either with 0, or A broad, or ou, or oo, or u, or 1 short.

That a sнот—from a gun, or bow, or other machine, к 2 means—something Cast or Thrown forth, needs neither instance nor explanation to persuade you. But a shor window may require both.

"And forth he goth, ielous and amerous,

A SHOT window means a projected window, thrown out beyond the rest of the front: What we now call a Bow window. And this was a very common method in our antient houses (many of which still remain); and was a circumstance worth the painting poet's notice; as affording a much better station for the serenading Clerk Absolon (whom I think I now see) than that which Mr. Urry and Mr. Tyrwhitt assign to him*.

When Speed (in the Two Gentlemen of Verona, pag. 27.) says to Launce—"Ile to the alehouse with you presently; where for one short of five pence, thou shalt have five thousand welcomes;"—what else does he say, but that—For five pence Cast down, or, For one Cast of five pence, he shall have five thousand welcomes?

A SHOTTEN herring, is a herring which has Cast or Thrown forth its spawn.

Mr. Tyrwhitt retains SHOT window; but says—"That is, I suppose, a window that was SHUT."

"Quhare stude ane wod, with SCHOUTAND bewis schene."

A SHOUT ("a word," says Johnson, "of which no ety-mology is known") is no other than the same participle differently spelled, and applied to sound Thrown forth from the mouth.

The nobles bended as to Ioue's statue, and the commons made a shower and thunder, with their caps and SHOWTS."

Coriolanus, pag. 11.

 Ibid. pag. 29.

Shur and shir are also the past tense (and therefore past participle) of the verb To Shite. And though, according to the modern fashion, we now write—To Shut the door—the common people generally pronounce it more properly and nearly to the original verb, and say—

^{*} Ferrari derives SCHIATTA from "Caudex, Caudico, Ciocco, Caudicata, Schiatta:" or from "Scaturiendo:" or from "Scapus."—Menage disapproves these, and says—"Crederei piutosto derivasse da "Planta, Exsplanta, Schianta, Schiatta." And, upon second thoughts, is so well satisfied with this latter derivation from Planta; that his Crederei piutosto is converted into—"Ne viene al sicuro."

To Shet the door: Which means to Throw or Cast the door to. But formerly it was otherwise written and pronounced: nor had a false delicacy proscribed a very innocent and decent word, till affectation made it otherwise.

A SHUTTLE-cork or SHITTLE-cork has the same meaning. i. e. A cork Thrown or Cast (backward and forward).

SHEET, (whether a sheet for a bed, a sheet of water, a sheet of lightning, a sheet anchor, &c.) is also the same participle reeat.

What we now write sheet anchor was formerly written shot anchor.

"Certaine praiers shoulde ther be sayd: and thus was against the stone the very SHOTE anker."

But, besides the above different ways of writing and pronouncing this same participle, as with other verbs; we have, with this verb, another source of variation. The Anglo-Saxon pc was pronounced both as sh and as sk. The participle therefore of pcitan, upon that account, assumes another apparently different form: and this different pronunciation (and consequently different writing) has given us scot, scout, scate, and skit.

Scot and shot are mutually interchangeable. They are merely one and the same word, viz. the Anglo-Saxon reeat, Σκατο-φαγος, merdi-vorus.

See also Σκατος, merda; and Σκιταλοι in Aristophanes.]

^{* [}See the Plutus of Aristophanes, act 3. sc. 2.

the past participle of reitan; the re being differently pronounced. Scot free, scot and lot, Rome-scot, &c. are the same as shot free, shot and lot, Rome-shot, &c.

The Italians have (from us) this same word scotto, applied and used by them for the same purpose as by us. Dante uses it in his Purgatory *: and is censured for the use of it, by those who, ignorant of its meaning, supposed it to be only a low, tavern expression; and applicable only to a tavern reckoning. And from this Italian scotto, the French have their Escot, Ecot, employed by them for the same purpose.

This word has extremely puzzled both the Italian and French etymologists. Its use and application they well knew: they could not but know: it was—"L'argent jetté† sur la table de l'hôte, pour prix du repas qu'on a pris chez lui."—But its etymology, or the real signification of the word, taken by itself, (which alone could afford the reason why the word was so used and applied,) intirely escaped them. Some considered that, in a tavern, people usually pay for what they have eaten: these therefore imagined that scotto might come from Excoctus of Coquere; and that it was used for the payment of Excoctus cibus. Excocto, Escotto, Scotto.

Others considered that men did not always eat in a tavern; and that their payment, though only for wine, was still called scotto. These therefore fixed upon a common circumstance, viz. that, whether eating or drinking, men were equally forced or compelled to pay the reckoning: they therefore sought for the etymology in Cogere and Excogere. Coacto, Excoacto, Excoacto, Excoacto, Excoacto, Scotto.

Indeed, if the derivation must necessarily have been found in the Latin, I do not know where else they could better have gone for it. But it is a great mistake, into which both the Italian and Latin etymologists have fallen, to suppose that all the Italian must be found in the Latin, and all the Latin in the Greek: for the fact is otherwise. The bulk and foundation of the Latin language is Greek; but great part of the Latin is the language of our Northern ancestors, grafted upon the Greek. And to our Northern language the etymologist must go, for that part of the Latin which the Greek will not furnish: and there, without any twisting or turning or ridiculous forcing and torturing of words, he will easily and clearly find it. We want therefore the testimony of no historians to conclude that the founders of the Roman state and of the Latin tongue came not from Asia, but from the North of Europe. For the language cannot lye. And from the language of every nation we may with certainty collect its origin. In the same manner; even though no history of the fact had remained; and though another Virgil and another Dionysius had again, in verse and prose, brought another Æneas from another Troy to settle modern Italy, after the destruction of the Roman government; yet, in spite of such false history, or silence of history, we should be able, from the modern language of the country (which Cannot possibly lye) to conclude with certainty that our Northern ancestors had again made another successful irruption into Italy, and again grafted their own language upon the Latin, as before upon the Greek. For all the Italian, which cannot be easily shewn to be Latin, can be easily shewn to be our Northern language.

It would therefore, I believe, have been in some degree useful to the learned world; if the present system of this country had not, by a* [shameful persecution and a most unconstitutional, illegal, and cruel sentence, destroyed] that virtuous and harmless good man, Mr. Gilbert Wakefield. For he had, shortly before his death, agreed with me to undertake, in conjunction, a division and separation of the Latin tongue into two parts: placing together in one division all that could be clearly shewn to be Greek; and in the other division, all that could be clearly shewn to be of Northern extraction. And I cannot forbear mentioning to you this circumstance; not to revive your grief for the loss of a valuable man who deserved [reward rather than punishment;] but because, he being dead and I speedily to follow him, you may perhaps excite and encourage some other persons more capable to execute a plan, which would be so useful to your favourite etymological amusement. I say, you must encourage them: for there appears no encouragement in this country at present [but for the invention of new taxes and new penalties, for spies and informers;] which swarm amongst us as numerously as our volunteers [in this our present state of siege;] with this advantage, that none of the former, [neither taxes, nor penalties, 'nor spies,] are ever rejected on account of their principles.

^{* [}The words in brackets were omitted in the first edition.—ED.]

Good God! This country [in a state of siege]!----What cannot an [obstinate system of despotism and corruption] atchieve! America, [Ireland,] Corsica, Hanover, with all our antient dependents, friends and allies, [All lost; All gone!] And in how short a time! And the inhabitants of this little [persecuted and plundered] island (the only remaining spot) [now in a state of siege!] Besieged collectively by France from without: [and each individual at home, more disgracefully and daily besieged] in his house by swarms of [tax collectors, assessors, and supervisors, armed with degrading lists, to be signed under precipitated and ensnaring penalties;] whilst his growing rents, like the goods of an insolvent trader, are [prematurely attached] in the hands of his [harassed tenants,] who now suddenly find that they too have a new and additional rent, beyond their agreement, to pay to a new and unforeseen landlord.

Turn your thoughts from this subject. Get out of the way of this vast rolling mass, which might easily have been stopped at the verge of the precipice; but must now roll to the bottom. " Ever right, Menenius. Ever, Ever."

A scout has been supposed, in some manner (but it is not attempted to be shewn in what manner) to belong to the verb Ecouter, Escouter, auscultare, To Listen: and this, merely because of a resemblance in the sound and letters of that verb. But is listening the usual basiness of a scour? Are his ears all, and his eyes nothing? Is he no good scour who returns with intelligence of what he has seen * of the enemy, unless he has likewise overheard their deliberations? Is an Out-scour at Cricket sent to a distance, that he may the better listen to what is passing? A scour means (subaud. some one, any one) sent out, Say before an army, to collect intelligence by any means: but, I suppose, by his eyes rather than by his ears; and to give notice of the neighbourhood or position &c. of an enemy. Sent out, (which I have here employed, because it is the word most used in modern discourse) is equivalent to Thrown or Cast. The Anglo-Saxon Sendan was used indifferently for Scitan: and SEND, in Old English, for Thrown or Cast. In the ninth chapter of St. Mark, verse 22, our modern translation says—" Oft times it hath Cast him into the fire and into the waters." Which our Old English translation renders—" Ofte he hath SENTE him bothe in to fier and in to watir." And the Anglo-Saxon has it-" he hyne zelomlice on ryn and on pæten rende." But the plainest instance I can recollect of the indifferent use of send and Cast or Thrown, is in the 12th chapter of Mark.—

[&]quot; Caliga, in Roman antiquity, was the proper soldier's shoe, made in the sandal fashion, without upper leather to cover the superior part of the foot, tho' otherwise reaching to the middle of the leg, and fastened with thongs. The sole of the caliga was of wood, like the sabot of the French peasants, and its bottom stuck full of nails; which clavi are supposed to have been very long in the shoes of the scouts and sentinels; whence these were called by way of distinction caligæ speculatoriæ; as if by mounting the wearer to a higher pitch, they gave a greater advantage to the sight."

For all they did CAST in of their abundance; but she of her want did CAST in all that she had, even all her living."

But, as the practice itself has long been banished from all liberal society, so the word is not easily to be found in liberal writings: and I really cannot recollect an instance of its use. But the adjective skittish, applied to a horse or jade of any kind, is common enough †.

The Dutch Scheet, peditus, is the same participle, and means merely (subaud. Wind) Cast out.

Our English word Sketch, the Dutch Schets, the Italian Schizzo, and (though further removed) the French Esquisse, are all the same participle. And, besides the application still common to all those languages, viz. "spezie di disegno non terminato," the Italians likewise apply Schizzo very properly to—"Quella macchia di fango, d'acqua, o d'altro liquore che viene dallo Schizzare: any spot of dirt, or water, or other liquor spirted out upon us.

The Latin (Sagitta pronounce Saghitta) is likewise this same participle skit, with the Latin terminating article A: and it means (subaud. something) Cast, Thrown, i. e. Shot. Skit, Skita, Sakita, Sagita: (The earlier Romans never doubled their letters.) And Sagitta comes not (as Isidorus, C. Scaliger, Caninius, Nunnesius and Vossius dreamed) from sagaci ictu, or σαγμα, or ακιδος, or σαγη*.

[Shoe, in Anglo-Saxon Scoe, and Scoh, and Ge-rcy, means sub-position. It is the past participle of Scyan, Ge-rcyan, To place under. S. Johnson, with his usual good luck, calls it—"the Cover of the foot." It means merely—Underplaced. See page 65.—"ealoe zercy." Ge-rcoo, Shod, calceatus.]

SLOPE SLOPE }—are the past participle of Slipan, To Slip.

SLIT }—Fissura pedis cervini, is the past participle SLOT of Slitan, findere, To Slit.

- "Here's Little John hath harbour'd you a Deer,

 And standing 'fore the dogs." Sad Shepherd, act 1. sc. 1.
- "Where harbor'd is the hart; there often from his feed
 The dogs of him do find; or thorough skilful heed,

 Where he had gone to lodge." Poly-olbion, song 13.

Whore—is the past participle of Dynan, To Hire. The word means simply (subaud. some one, any one) Hired. It was formerly written without the w. How, or when, or by whom, the w was first absurdly prefixed, I know not.

- "Treuli I sey to you, for pupplicans and HOORIS shulen go bifore you in to the rewme of God. For John came to you in the wey of rightfulnesse, and ye bileuyde not to hym; but pupplicans and HOORIS bileuiden to him."—Mattheu, chap. 21.

- "Shal I make the membres of Christ, partes of the HORES bodye."—Detection of the Deuils Sophistrie, fol. 96. pag. 2.

In confirmation of this explanation of the word (though it needs none, for it is in the regular and usual course of the whole language,) we have the practice of other languages: which, on the same score, give the same denomination to the same thing. Thus, as Vossius has well observed, Meretrix in Latin is so denominated a Merendo; and Πορνος, Πορνη, in Greek, a Περναω (quod a Περαω) vendo.

F.

Am I then to understand that all the other words of reproach (so numerous and dissimilar) which are cast upon unchaste women, have a similar etymology? And that all those denominations (Harlot, Prostitute, Concu-bine, Wench, Trull, Punk, Drab, Strumpet) have also a reference to Sale and Hire?

H.

Not so. In one respect they have all a resemblance; inasmuch as they are all past participles; but they do not all relate to the circumstance of Sale or Hire, as WHORE and HARLOT do.

Harlot—I believe with Dr. Th. Hickes, is merely Horelet, the diminutive of hore. The word was formerly applied (and commonly) to a very different sort of Hireling, for that is all which it means, to Males as well as Females. In Troylus and Cressida, Thersites tells Patroclus,

- "Thou art thought to be Achilles male VARLOT.
- P. Male VARLOT, you rogue, What's that?
- Th. Why his masculine WHORE."

VARLET The antient VARLET* and the modern VALET VALET for Hireling, I believe to be the same word as HARLOT; the aspirate only changed to v, and the R, by effeminate and slovenly speech, suppressed in the latter: as Lord, by affectation, is now frequently pronounced Lod or Lud.

F.

You do not surely produce to me these words of Thersites, to shew that HARLOT was applied to males as well as to females: for they contain an infamous charge against Patroclus, and intended to give him a female appellation and office.

^{* [}Mr. Todd in a note, to Spenser's Faerie Queene, book 1, canto 8, stanza 13, tells us, that—" the word VARLET, in old French, signifies a Youth." But Mr. Todd knew as little as heart can wish, concerning the signification of any words.]

H.

Agreed. But they shew that VARLOT and WHORE were synonymous terms. For the common application of HARLOT to men, merely as persons receiving wages or hire, I must produce other instances.

 A better felowe shulde a man nat fynde."

Volpone. The Fox, act 2. sc. 6.

"It is written in Solinus De mirabilibus mundi, that in the Island of Sardinia there is a well; whereof if a true man doe drinke, his eie sight straight waie waxeth cleere; but if a false HARLOT doe but sup of it, hee waxeth starke blinde out of hande, although hee did see neuer so well before."—Wilson upon Usurie, fol. 186.

Virg. Æn. lib. 7. line 563.

Trull, applied to a woman, means perforata. Dynel, Dynl; the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Dynlian, perforare. And as Dynlian or Dinlian, by a very common transposition of R, is in English Thrill; so the regular past participle of Dinlian, viz. Dynl or Dunl, is become the English Throll, Thrul, or Trull.*.

Punk.

- "She may be a PUNCKE: for many of them are neither maid, widow, nor wife."—Measure for Measure, pag. 81.
 - "Squiring PUNCK and Puncklings up and down the city."

 B. and Fletcher. Martial Maid.

Punk is the regular past participle of Pynzan, pungere: and it means (subaud. a female) Pung or Punc, i. e. Puncta.

- "Lo, he cometh with cloudis, and ech ige shal see him, and their PUNGIDEN or prickiden hym."—Apocalips, chap. 1.
- "Behold, he cometh with clouds, and every eye shall see him, and they also which Pierced him."—Revelations, chap. 1. ver. 7.

DRAB—is the past participle of akeiban, ejicere, expellere.

"They say he keepes a Troyan DRAB, and uses the traitour Chalcas his tent."—Troylus and Cressida.

Thersites here gives Cressida the appellation of DRAB; with peculiar propriety: for, according to his slanderous speech, who never omitted a circumstance of reproach, she was so in more senses than one. She was Dnabbe, as faces (for so our ancestors applied this participle): and she was Dnab and Troyan Dnab, as being expelled and an Out-cast from Troy.

STRUMPET—i. e. Stronpöt*; a compound of two Dutch participles. Which, being Dutch, let Cassander and his associate explain.

F.

Speaking of Varlets, you mentioned the word Lord, That word is not yet become quite an opprobrious term, whatever it may be hereafter; which will depend intirely upon the conduct of those who may bear that title, and the means by which it may usually be obtained. But what does the word mean? For I can never believe, with Skinner, that it proceeds from—"Dlar, panis, et Ford (pro Afford) suppeditare: quia scilicet multis panem largitur, i. e. multos alit." *For the animal we have lately known by that name is intirely of a different description.

H.

You know, it was antiently written Dlapono; and our etymologists were misled by Dlap, which, as they truly said, certainly means and is our modern LOAF. But when they had told us that LOAF came from Dlap, they thought their business with that word was compleated. And this is their usual practice with other words. But I do not so understand etymology. I could as well be contented to stop at LOAF in the English, as at Dlap in the Anglo-Saxon: for such a derivation affords no additional nor ultimate meaning. The question with me is still, why Dlap in the Anglo-Saxon? I want a meaning, as the cause of the appellation; and not merely a similar word in another language.

^{[*} Strontpot, lasanum: Skinner.—ED.]

^{† &}quot;LORD, ab A.-S. blarono, postea Loveno, Dominus: hoc a blar, panis, et Ford pro Afford, suppeditare. Quia sc. dominus, i. e. nobilis multis panem largitur, i. e. multos alit."—Skinner.

Junius and Verstegan concur with this derivation; though Junius acknowledges a difficulty—" quoniam nusquam adhuc incideram in vocabulum A.-Saxonicum quod responderet Angl. Afford."

Had they considered that we use the different terms BREAD and DOUGH and LOAF for the same material substance in different states; they would probably have sought for the etymology or different meanings of those words, in the circumstances of the different states. And had they so sought, they probably would have found: and the meaning of the word Dlap would have saved them from the absurdity of their derivation of LORD.

Bread we have already explained: It is Brayed grain. After breaking or pounding the grain, the next state in the process towards LOAF is DOUGH. And Dough—is the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Deapian, to moisten or to wet. Dough therefore or now means Wetted.

You will not fail to observe en passant, that DEW—(A.-S. Deap) though differently spelled and pronounced, is the same participle with the same meaning.

"Ane hate fyry power, warme and DEW,
Heuinly begynnyng and original
Bene in thay sedis quhilkis we saulis cal."

- "Now sucking of the sap of herbe most meet,
 Or of the DEAW, which yet on them does lie."

 Spenser's Muiopotmos, st. 23.
- "Whose beautie shyneth as the morning cleare,
 With silver DEAW upon the roses pearling."

 Spenser. Colin Clouts come home again.]

After the BREAD has been wetted (by which it becomes DOUGH) then comes the Leaven (which in the Anglo-Saxon is termed Dære and Daren); by which it becomes LOAF.

LOAF—in Anglo-Saxon Dlap, A broad) is the past participle of Dlipian, to raise; and means merely Raised. So in the Mœso-Gothic, haribs is loaf; which is the past participle of haeibgan, to raise, or to lift up.

In the old English translation we read—"He hauynge mynde of his mercy Took up Israel his child." In the modern version—"He hath holpen his servant Israel in remembrance of his mercy." Luke, chap. 1. ver. 54. But in the Gothic it is haeibiaa iskaeaa, He hath raised or listed up Israel.

When the etymologist had thus discovered that Dlar meant Raised; I think he must instantly have perceived that Dlarono was a compound word of Dlar (raised or exalted) and Ono, Ortus, source, origin, birth.

Lord—therefore means High-born, or of an Exalted Origin. With this explanation of the word, you will perceive, that [kings] can no more make a Lord, than they can make a Traitor. They may indeed place a Thief and a Traitor amongst lords; and destroy an innocent and meritorious man as a Traitor. But the theft and treachery of the one, and the innocence and merits of the other, together with the infamy of thus mal-assorting them, are far beyond the reach and power of any [kings] to do away.

F.

If Dlapopo, i. e. LORD, does not mean (as I before suspected, and you have since satisfied me it does not mean) an Afforder of Bread; neither can Dlapoiz, T. e. LADY, mean a Distributor or Server out of that Bread*: as (still

"LORD.

^{*} Verstegan, in his Restitution of Decayed Intelligence, edit. 1634, pag. 316, gives us the following account of LORD and LADY.

[&]quot;I finde that our ancestors used for LORD the name of Laford, which (as it should seeme) for some aspiration in the pronouncing, they wrot Hlaford and Hlafurd. Afterward it grew to be written misled by Dlar) the same etymologists have supposed. Yet in Dlarouz there is no Opo, nor any equivalent word to make her name signify High-born.

Loverd: and by receiving like abridgment as other our ancient appellations have done, it is in one syllable become LORD.

- "To deliver therefore the true etymology, the reader shall understand, that albeit wee have our name of Bread from Breod, as our ancestors were woont to call it, yet used they also, and that most commonly, to call Bread by the name of Hlaf; from whence we now only retaine the name of the forme or fashion wherein Bread is usually made, calling it a Loaf; whereas Loaf comming of Hlaf or Laf, is rightly also Bread it selfe, and was not of our ancestors taken for the forme only, as now we use it.
- "Now was it usuall in long foregoing ages, that such as were endued with great wealth and meanes above others, were chiefely renowned (especially in these Northerne regions) for their house-keeping and good hospitality; that is, for being able and using to feed and sustaine many men; and therefore were they particularly honoured with the name and title of Hlaford, which is as much to say as An Aforder of Laf, that is a Bread-giver: intending (as it seemeth) by Bread, the sustenance of man; that being the substance of our food, the most agreeable to nature, and that which in our daily prayers we especially desire at the hands of God.
- "And if we duly observe it, wee shall finde that our nobility of England, which generally doe beare the name of LORD, have alwaies, and as it were of a successive custome (rightly according unto that honourable name) maintayned and fed more people, to wit, of their servants, retayners, dependants, tenants, as also the poore, than the nobility of any country in the continent, which surely is a thing very honourable and laudable, and most well befitting noblemen and right noble minds.

"LADY.

"The name or title of Lady, our honourable appellation generally for all principall women, extendeth so farre, as that it not only mounteth up from the wife of the knight to the wife of the king, but

H.

Nor does it so signify. Dlapoiz signifies and is merely Lofty, i. e. Raised or Exalted: her birth being intirely out of the question; the wife following the condition of the husband. But I wish you here to observe, that the past participle of the verb Dlipian, besides LOAF, LORD, and LADY, has furnished us with two other supposed substantives; viz. LIFT (Lyrt) and LOFT.

The former of these, LIFT, is not used at present in England; but, I am told, is still common in Scotland.

remaineth to some women whose husbands are no knights, such as having bin Lord Majors are afterward only called Masters, as namely the Aldermen of York.

"It was anciently written Hleafdian or Leafdian, from whence it came to be Lafdy, and lastly Lady. I have shewed here last before how Hlaf or Laf was sometime our name of Bread, as also the reason why our noble and principall men came to be honoured in the name of Laford, which now is LORD, and even the like in corespondence of reason must appeare in this name of Leafdian, the feminine of Laford: the first syllable whereof being anciently written Hleaf and not Hlaf, must not therefore alienate it from the like nature and sense; for that only seemeth to have bin the feminine sound; and we sea that of Leafdian we have not retained Leady but Lady. Well then both Hlaf and Hleaf we must here understand to signifie one thing, which is Bread: Dian is as much to say as Serve; and so is Leafdian, a Bread-server. Whereby it appeareth that as the Laford did allow food and sustenance, so the Leafdian did see it served and disposed to the guests. And our ancient and yet continued custome that our Ladies and Gentlewomen doe use to carue and serve their guests at the table, which in other countries is altogether strange and unusuall, doth for proofe hereof well accord and corespond with this our ancient and honourable feminine appellation."

LIFT—is the past participle Dlipoo or LIFED; obtained, in the usual manner, by adding the participial termination of or ED to Dlip or Lif, Lifed, Lif'd, Lift. Seeing the signification of the word lift, you will not wonder that it is perfectly equivalent to HEAVEN; and that in all the foregoing passages you may, if you please, substitute Heaven for Lift: One being the past participle of Dlipian, and the other of Deapan.

LOFT (our common name for a Raised, Elevated or High room or chamber)—is likewise the past participle of Dlyran; obtained in the same manner, by adding the participial termination ED to the past tense Dlap or Lawf.

Lafed (A broad) Laf'd, Laft—or LOFT.

- "A heart where dread was neuer so imprest,
 To hide the thought that might the truth advance,
 In neither fortune LOFT, nor yet represt,
 To swell in wealth, or yeeld unto mischaunce."

 Songes and Sonets. By the Earl of Surrey, fol. 16. pag. 2.
- "Absence, my friende, workes wonders oft, Now brings full low, that lay full LOFT." Ibid. fol. 87. pag. 1.

Being thus in possession of the supposed substantive LOFT, the language proceeded in its usual way of forming an adjective by adding 17 to it; which our modern language uniformly, in all cases, changes to Y. Hence the Adjective LOFTY.

LOFTY are the same word, the same participle, the and same adjective; and mean merely Raised, LADY Elevated, Exalted.

F.

I cannot take this leap with you at once from LOFTY to LADY: They are too distant for me. I must have some station or some steps between, or I shall never reach it. I do not boggle at the difference between o and A, or, as it was pronounced, Aw. That change is perpetually made. But the FT in the one, instead of D in the other, I cannot so easily get over. Besides, we use the one as a substantive, and the other as an adjective.

H.

It is the r alone which, being retained in the one and suppressed in the other, causes all your difficulty, and all the difference between the words.

Dlap, Dlapo, Dlapo, Dlapo 13

omitting the incipient H, is in our modern character,

Laf, Lafed, Laf'd, Lafd-y

if the r is retained in the word, the immediately subsequent D is, as usual, changed to T: and the word will be Lafty (A broad) or LOFTY.

If the r is suppressed, no cause remains for changing the D, and the word will be LADY.

It is not necessary, I suppose, to say one word to explain why LADY is used as a substantive. Their frequent recurrence causes the same to numberless other adjectives which are now considered as substantives.

F.

It seems rather extraordinary to me, that you should derive from one common stock so many different words, which in their common use and application do not, at first sight, appear to have any the smallest relation to each other. That Lord and Lady however might have a common origin, and be derived from the same source, I could very well suppose. But how their meaning should be connected with the Lift, a Loft, and a Loaf, I confess I had not imagined. I do see at present the common link which holds them together. But, though you did the same thing before with the verbs Dearan and Scitan, yet, I suppose, such coincidencies are rare.

H.

No. It is the necessary condition of all languages. It is the lot of man, as of all other animals, to have few different ideas (and there is a good physical reason for it), though we have many words: and yet, even of them, by no means so many as we are supposed to have. I mean, of words with different significations. What you now notice would have happened often before, if I had not been careful to keep it out of sight, till you should be ripe for it.

At first, if you remember, we were led to a discovery of these hidden participles only by the participial terminations ED, EN, and T. But we have now proceeded a little further, and have discovered another set of participles which we obtain by a change of the characteristic letter of the verb. We may now therefore look back to those participles we at first noticed; and add to them those which are derived from the same common stock, and which I forbore at that time to mention. Thus

Brown as well as Brand*, are the past participle of the verb To Bren, or To Brin. The French and Italians have in their languages this same participle; written by them Brun and Bruno. Brown means Burned, (subaud. colour). It is that colour which things have that have been Burned.

. [" Come procede innanzi dall'ardore
Per lo papiro suso un color BRUNO,
Che non è nero ancora, e'l bianco muore."

"Newe grene chese of smalle clammynes comfortethe a hotte stomake, as Rasis sayth, it repressethe his BROUNES and heate." Regiment of Helthe. By T. Paynel. (1541.) fol. 61. pag. 1.

"It BOURNETH ouer moche."—Ibid. fol. 62. pag. 1.

(Hence also the Italians have their Bronzo: from which the French and English have their Bronze.)

Nor is this peculiar to our language alone; nor to this colour only. All colours in all languages must have their denomination from some common object, or from some circumstances which produce those colours. So Vossius well derives fuscus—" παρα το φωσκώ, quod Hippocrati est Ustulare. Nam quæ ustulantur Fusca reddunt." In the same manner,

Yellow—(Geælzeð, Ge-ælz) is the past participle of Ge-ælan*, accendere. The Italian Giallo and the French (Ge-ælzen) Gialne, Jaune, are the same participle. So the Latin words Flammeus and Flavus from Φλεγω, Φλεγμα, Flamma.

GREEN—is the past participle of Lipenian, virescere: as Viridis of virere, and Prasinus from Ileason.

White—is the past participle of ΟλΨGAN, spumare.

^{* [}Ale; Yellow; Yelk, Yolk; Gold.]

GREY—of Lepeznan, inficere, &c.

BRUNT—(Brun-ed, Brun'd, Brunt) i. e. Burnt, is the same participle as BROWN or Brun. In speaking of a battle, To bear the BRUNT of the day—is to bear the Heat, the Hot or Burnt part of it.

[Skinner says—"BRUNT, To bear the BRUNT of the day: maximum prælii impetum sustinere. Procul dubio a Teut. et Belg. BRUNST, ardor, fervor, calor, æstus, i. e. The Heat of the day."]

"Enceladus body with thunder lyis half BRONT."

Douglas, booke 3. pag. 87.

"I report me unto the kynges maiestye that ded is, whiche at the fyrst BROUNT, as sone as he toke Godes cause in hand, that leopard and dragon of Rome, did not only solicitat thole forene worold against him, but &c."

Declaracion of Christe. By Johan Hoper. (1547.)

With what reason could ye thinke, that if ye bode the hote BRUNT of battaile, but ye must needs feele the smart."

The Hurt of Sedition. By Sir John Cheke.

LOG as well as Law—are also the past participle of AATGAN, Leczan, ponere, To Lay. Laz (A LOAD) broad, and retaining the sound of the z) Log, from the Anglo-Saxon, corresponds with Post from the Latin. We say indifferently—"To stand like a POST," or "To stand like a Log" in our way. Lag-ed or Lag'd (dismissing the sound of the z) becomes Lad (A broad) or LOAD. And you will not fail to observe, that, though Weight is subaud. and therefore implied in the word LOAD; yet Weight is not LOAD, until cuivis Impositum.

SHIRT and SKIRT

All these, so variously written and pronounced; and now so differently and distinctly applied; are yet merely the past participle of Scipan, To Shear, to cut, to divide, to separate. And they were formerly used indifferently.

Nor have we any occasion to travel for their etymology (I cannot say with Dr. Johnson, for he himself never advanced a single footstep towards any of them, but by his ignorant direction) to the Dutch, the Swedish, the Islandic, the French, or the Frisick. It is true that all these languages, as well as the German, the Danish, and even the Italian and the Spanish, share this participle in common with ourselves: and if that be Etymology, barely to find out a similar word in some other language, the business of the etymologist is perfectly idle and ridi-For they might all refer, each to the other, without any one of them ever arriving at a meaning. the Italian, the French and the Spanish have this participle from our Northern ancestors: and in our own language the etymology of all these words is to be found: and from a Northern language only can they be rationally explained. The Italian and French etymologists are therefore in some sort excusable for the trash they have written on the Northern words in their language: If I was not afraid of being condemned by my own sentence, I should add, an Englishman has no excuse.

To exemplify and confirm what I have said, I will give you a few instances; your own reading will furnish you with as many more as you please.

 Ibid. song. 7.

SHEER, as we now use it, means separated from every thing else. As when we say—"sheer ignorance," i. e. separated from any the smallest mixture of information; or, separated from any other motive. So in the instance from Beaumont and Fletcher (who write it SHAER) it means, that the feather was so separated by the shot, as not to leave the smallest particle behind.

Shore, as the sea-shore or shore of a river (which latter expression Dr. Johnson, without any reason, calls "a licentious use" of the word) is the place where the continuity of the land is interrupted or separated by the sea or the river. Observe, that shore is not any determined spot, it is of no size, shape nor dimensions; but relates merely to the separation of land from land.

Shored, Shor'd, short (or, as Douglas has written it, schorit) cut off; is opposed to long, which means Ex-tended: Long being also a past participle of Lenzian, to extend, or to stretch out.

SHIRT and SKIRT (i. e. rciped) is the same participle, differently pronounced, written, and applied.

Shower (in Anglo-Saxon reyup and reup) means merely broken, divided, separated: (subaud. clouds). Junius and Skinner had some notion of the meaning of this word; Johnson none.

Score, when used for the number Twenty, has been well and rationally accounted for, by supposing that our unlearned ancestors, to avoid the embarrassment of large numbers, when they had made twice ten notches, cut off the piece or Talley (Taglié) containing them; and afterwards counted the scores or pieces cut off; and reckoned by the number of separated pieces, or by scores.

Score, for account or reckoning, is well explained, and in the same manner; from the time when divisions, marks or notches, cut in pieces of stick or wood, were used instead of those Arabian figures we now employ. This antient manner of reckoning is humourously noted by Shakspear.

"Thou hast most traiterously corrupted the youth of the realme, in erecting a Grammer Schoole; and whereas before our fore-fathers had no other bookes but the SCORE and the TALLY, thou hast caused printing to be used."—2d part Henry 6. pag. 141.

["And on his brest a bloodie crosse he bore,
The deare remembrance of his dying Lord,
Upon his shield the like was also SCOR'D."

Spenser's Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 1. st. 2.]

SHARE, SHIRE, SCAR, one and the same past participle, mean separated, divided. SHARE, any separated part or portion. SHIRE, a separated part or portion of this realm. And though we now apply SCAR only to a cicatrix, or the remaining mark of a separation; it was formerly applied to any separated part*.

[" —— Stay, Sir King,
This man is better than the man he slew,
As well descended as thyselfe, and hath
More of thee merited, then a band of Clotens
Had euer SCARRE for. Cymbeline, pag. 397. col. 2.

"Tho him she brought abord, and her swift bote
Forthwith directed to that further strand:
Upon that SHORE he spyed Atin stand,
There by his maister left, when late he far'd
In Phædrias flitt barck over that perlous SHARD."

Faerie Queene, book 2. cant. 6. st. 38.]

In the instance I produced to you from Gower, he calls

^{*[}Skinner says,—" A SCAR, a Fr. G. Escare, Escarre, cicatrix, utr. detorto sensu, a Gr. Escapa, Crusta post adustionem relicta. Medicis Escara, vel, ut Minsh. vult, a Belg. Schorre, Schoore, ruptura; sed prius præfero: Escara enim cicatrici propter duritiem affinis est. Verum si Camdeno credendum sit, Scap, A.-S. cautem signare, longe optimum esset ab isto Scap deducere: nam instar cautis dura est. V. Camden, in agro Ebor. reddentem etymon portûs Scarborough."]

So you will find in Ray's North-country words (pag. 52.) that what we now call Pot-sherds, or Pot-shards, are likewise called Pot-scars or Pot-shreds*. You will find, too, that where we now use scar, was formerly used score, with the same meaning: as in Ray's Proverbs (pag. 19.)—"Slander leaves a score behind it."—So the "cliffe of a rocke" (i. e. the cleaved part of it) as Ray informs us, is still called a "scarre." Douglas, we have seen, calls it—"ane schore rolkis syde."

"And northward from her springs haps SCARDALE forth to find,

Which like her mistress Peake, is naturally inclin'd To thrust forth ragged CLEEVES, with which she scattered lies,

As busy nature here could not herself suffice,
Of this oft-alt'ring earth the sundry shapes to show,
That from my entrance here doth rough and rougher grow,
Which of a lowly dale although the name it bear,
You, by the rocks, might think that it a mountain were,
From which it takes the name of SCARDALE."

Poly-olbion, song 26.

"As first without herself at sea to make her strong,
And fence her farthest point from that rough Neptune's rage,
The isle of Walney lies; whose longitude doth swage
His fury, when his waves on Furnesse seems to war,
Whose crooked back is arm'd with many a rugged SCAR
Against his boist'rous shocks."

The Italian Scerre, Sciarrare, and Schiera; and the French a l'Ecart, and Dechirer, sufficiently speak the same Northern origin; and none other has been or can be found for them *."

Blunt—As blind has been shewn to be Blin-ed; so blunt is Blon-ed, the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Blinnan, To Blin, to stop. Blon is the regular Anglo-Saxon past tense; to which by adding Ed, we have Blon-ed, Blon'd, Blont or blunt: i. e. Stopped in its decreasing progress towards a point or an edge.

[" For God he often saw from heavens hight,
All were his earthly eien both BLUNT and bad,
And through great age had lost their kindly sight."

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 10. st. 47.]

Sciarrare from the French Escarter.
Schiera from the Latin Spira.
E'cart from Ex parte.

FOH! I considered the adverb or interjection FIE! FAUGH! as the Imperative of the verb Fian, To Hate: and I have very lately shewn FIEND, pland, to be the present participle of the same verb. Now that we have noticed the usual and regular change of the characteristic letter of the verbs, I suppose that you are at once aware that FOE, pa, is the past tense, and therefore past participle, of the same verb plan; and means (subaud. any one,) Hated.

I think you must at the same time perceive, that the nauseating (Interjection, as it is called) FOH! or FAUGH! is merely the same past participle*.

"FOH! one may smel in such, a will most ranke, Foule disproportions, thoughts unnaturall."

Othello, pag. 324.

Fen In the explanation of Fenowed, Vinewed or Faint Whinid, the past participle of rynizean; I mentioned fen and faint, as past participles of the same verb. But I forbore at that time to consider them more particularly, because no mention had then been made of the change of the characteristic letter.

FAN or FEN is the past tense, and therefore past participle, of rynizean; and means corrupted, spoiled, decayed, withered. In modern speech we apply FEN only to stagnated or corrupted water; but it was formerly applied to any corrupted or decayed, or spoiled substance.

^{* &}quot;Mn γενοιτο, in Greake, sygnyfyeth detestacyon, as we speake wyth one syllable in Englyshe, FYE."—Detection of the Deuils Sophistrie. By Steuen Gardiner, Bp. of Winchester, fol. 64. pag. 1.

Clouve, Clough, cleaved or divided—into small pieces. Clouved, Clouv'd, Clout.

"Indeede a must shoote nearer, or heele ne're hit the CLOUT."

Loue's Labour Lost, act 4.

Clouted cream is so called for the same reason.

WOOF—as WEFT, before noticed, is the past participle of Peran, To Weave.

"And yet the spacious bredth of this division Admits no orifex for a point as subtle As Ariachne's broken WOOFE to enter."

Troylus and Cressida.

TAG—as well as TIGHT, is the past participle of Tian, vincire.

Ford—S. Johnson says, most untruly, that this word—"sometimes signifies the stream, the current, without any consideration of passage or shallowness*."

^{* &}quot;FORD", says Junius, "Vadum, qualiscunque via aut transitus per flumen. A.-S. popo, a rapan, ire, transire: quam originem tradit Guntherus Ligurini sui lib. primo:

As fart, so ford is the past participle of Fanan, To Go; and always, without exception, means Gone, i. e. a place Gone over or through.

WAND are all (as well as WANT and GAUNT before-WAND Wane, to decrease, to fall away; and mean Decreased, or fallen away. The moon in the WANE, is the moon in a decreased state. Skelton, page 167, Edit. 1736, says—"The waters were WAN," i. e. decreased.

 - "Eftsoones she cast by force and tortious might Her to displace, and to herselfe t'have gained The kingdome of the night, and waters by her WAINED." Faerie Queene. Two Cantos of Mutabilitie, cant. 6. st. 10.]

TALL
All these words, as well as Tilt, which we have already explained, however different they may at first sight appear, are all one word, with one meaning; and are the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Tilian, To Lift up, To Till.

TALL, and the French word Taille (as applied to stature), i. e. raised, lifted up; require, I suppose, no explanation.

["Buona è la gente, e non può da più dotta
O'da più forte guida esser condotta."

Gierusalemme Liberata, cant. 1. st. 61.

"TALL were the men, and led they could not be By one more strong, or better skil'd than he."

Godfrey of Bulloigne, translated by R. C.

N.B. For this use of the word TALL, see B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour, and elsewhere.

Toll, and the French word Taille (which is taken of Goods) differ only in pronunciation and consequent writing of them. It is a part lifted off or taken away. Nor will this use of the word appear extraordinary, when we consider the common expressions of—To raise taxes—To Levy taxes—Lever des impots.—A Levy upon any persons—Une Levée.

The TOLL of a bell, is, its being Lifted up, which causes that sound we call its TOLL.

Tool is (some instrument, any instrument) Lifted up, or taken up, to work with.

Toll (for labour), applied perhaps at first principally to having Tilled (or lifted up) the earth; afterwards to other sorts of labour. The verb was formerly written in English Tueil and Tuail.

"Biholde ye the lilies of the feeld hou thei wexen: thei TUEILEN not, nether spinnen."—Matheu, chap. 6.

"Greteth well Marie: the whiche hath TUAILID myche in us."—Romans, chap. 16.

Toil (for a snare) is any thing Lifted up or raised, for the purpose of ensnaring any animal. As, A spider's web is a toil (something Lifted up) to catch flies: springes and nets, toils for other animals.

BATCH—as well as BACON (before explained) is the past participle of Bacan, To Bake. The indifferent pronunciation of CH or K, ought not to cause any difficulty: for it prevails throughout the whole language: As Link and Linch, Rick and Rich, &c.

A BATCH of bread, is, the bread Baked at one time.

I have already said that BARKEN is the past participle of the verb To Bar: and that, when we apply this word Barren either to land or to females, we assert the passage, either from the womb or the earth, to be Barren or Barred from bearing any thing into the world or into life.

Our English verb To Bar is the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon verb BAIKTAN, Beopgan, Bipgan, Bypgan; which means, To Defend, To Keep safe, To Protect, To Arm, To Guard, To Secure, To Fortify, To Strengthen. And the past participle of this verb has furnished our language with the following supposed substantives:

A BAR, in all its uses is a Defence: that by which any thing is fortified, strengthened, or defended.

A BARN (Bar-en, Bar'n) is a covered inclosure, in which the grain &c. is protected or defended from the weather, from depredation, &c.

A BARON is an armed, defenceful, or powerful man.

A BARGE is a strong boat.

A BARGAIN is a confirmed, strengthened agreement. After two persons have agreed upon a subject, it is usual to conclude with asking—Is it a BARGAIN? Is it confirmed?

A BARK is a stout vessel.

The BARK of a tree is its defence: that by which the tree is defended from the weather &c.

"The cause is, for that trees last according to the strength and quantity of their sap and juice; being well munited by their BARK against the injuries of the air."—Bacon's Natural History, cent. 6.

The BARK of a dog is that by which we are defended by that animal.

A BARKEN, according to Skinner—"Vox in comitatu. Wilts usitatissima, Atrium, a Yard of a house, vel a verbo To Barr; vel a Germ. Bergen, abscondere; A.-S. Beonzan, munire, q. d. locus clausus, respectu sc. agrorum."

A HAUBERK. Vossius, Wachter and Caseneuve concur in its etymology.—" Halsberga vel Halsperga, vox est Saxonica, proprieque signat thoracem ferreum, sive armaturam colli et pectoris; ab Hals, collum, et Bergen, tegere, protegere, munire. Quomodo et in Legg. Ripuariis. cap. 36. §. 11. Bainberga, pro ocrea*, sive crurum armatura."— Vossius. De vitiis sermonis, lib. 2. cap. 9.

The French, in their accustomed manner changing the L in Dalr to u, made the word HAUBERG: and the Italians, in their manner, made it USBERGO.

A BURGH or BOROUGH meant formerly a fortified Town †.

[Spenser says unadvisedly:—

"By that which I have read of a BOROUGH, it signifiest a Free Towne, which had a principall officer, called a Headborough, to become ruler, and undertake for all the dwellers under him."

Spenser. View of the State of Ireland.

^{* [}The Boot was much used by the ancients, by the foot as well as the horsemen. It was called by the ancient Romans ocrea; in middle-age writers, greva, gambera, benberga, bainbarga, and bemberga. The boot is said to have been the invention of the Carians. It was at first made of leather, afterwards of brass or iron, and was proof both against cuts and thrusts. It was from this that Homer calls the Greeks brazen-booted. The boot only covered half the leg; some say the right leg, which was more advanced than the left, it being advanced forward in an attack with the sword; but in reality it appears to have been used on either leg, and sometimes on both. Those who fought with darts or other missile weapons, advanced the left leg foremost, so that this only was booted.—Encyclopædia Britannica, vol. 3. pag. 393.]

A BURROW for rabbets &c. is a defended or protected place: to which a WARREN is synonymous, meaning the same thing: for WARREN is the past participle of Pepian, defendere, protegere, tueri.

"Foxis han BORWIS or dennes, and Briddis of the eir han nestis; but mannes sone hath not where he shal reste his hede." Mattheu, chap. 8. ver. 20.

A BOROWE was formerly used for what we now call a Security, any person or thing by which repayment is secured; and by which the Lender is defended or guarded from the loss of his loan.

Burial, Bynzel, is the diminutive of Byniz or Burgh; a defended or fortified place. To Bury, Bynzan, sepelire, means To Defend: as Gray in his Elegy expresses it—"These bones from insult to protect." It cannot escape you, that the Latin sepelire has the same meaning: for seps or sepes "notat id, quod objectum, prohibet introitum in agrum vel hortum."

STERN, in its different applications, has already been shewn to be the past participle of the verb Stipan, To Stir,

To Steer, To Move. This participle also gives us the following substantives.

Store Stour Sturt

A STORE is the collective term for any quantity or number of things stirred or moved into some one place together.

START

STIR STURDY Stour (A.-S. rtup), formerly in much use, means moved, stirred: and was applied

ETOURDIJ equally to dust, to water, and to men; all of them things easily moved.

 Ibid.

["In religion and libertie were sayd to be of many men the very cause of all these STURRIES."

R. Ascham, in a Letter to I. Asstely, pag. 7.]

STURT is formed in the usual manner from stour, rup. Stur-ed, Stur'd, Sturt.

- "Dolorus my lyfe I led in STURT and pane."

 Douglas, booke 2. pag. 41.
- "Hyr moder, quham sa sone full desolate Yone fals se reuer wyl leif in STURT, God wate."

 Ibid. booke 7. pag. 219.
- "Suffir me swelt, and end this cruel lyffe, Quhil doutsum is yit all syc STURT and striffe."

 Ibid. booke 8. pag. 263.

A START and a STIR require neither instance nor explanation.

By the accustomed addition of 13 or y, to stour or rup, we have also the adjective STURDY, and the French Estourdi, Etourdi.

Storm—the past participle of Stynmian, agitare, furere.

DAY—is the past participle Day, of the Anglo-Saxon Dayan, lucescere. By adding the participial termination EN to Day, we have Dayen or DAWN already mentioned.

I told you some time since that a CHURN is the past participle Eypen, of the Anglo-Saxon verb Eypan, Acypan, vertere, revertere; and that it means Turned, Turned about, or Turned backwards and forwards. This same verb Eypan, gives us also the following, Menage, Minshew, Junius, Skinner, &c. have no resource for the derivation of CHAIR, but the Greek zalida; in which they all agree. But, though they travel so far for it, none of them has attempted to shew by what steps they proceed from zalida to CHAIR. The process would be curious upon paper. But zalida, though a Seat, is not a CHAIR; nor does it convey the same meaning. CHAIR is a species of Seat. It is not a fixed, but a moveable seat; Turned about and Returned at pleasure: and from that circumstance it has its denomination: It is a CHAIR-seat.

CAR*, CART, CHARIOT, &c. and the Latin CARRUS are the same participle. This word was first introduced into the Roman language by Cæsar, who learned it in his war with the Germans. Vossius mistakingly supposes it derived from Currus.

At the breaking up of the severe frost in the year 1795, a boy ran into the house of the proprietor of this island, who lived within view of it, and told him that "his Car was coming up the Tarn." The proprietor and his family soon proved the truth of the boy's report, and beheld with astonishment, not "Birnam-wood removed to Dunsinane!" but the woody island approaching them with slow and majestic motion. It rested, however, before it reached the edge of the tarn, and afterwards frequently changed its position as the wind directed; being sometimes seen at one side of the lake, which is about two hundred yards across, and sometimes in the centre. It is conjectured to have been long separated from the bed of the lake, and only fastened by some of the roots of the trees, which were probably broken by the extraordinary rise of the water on the melting of the ice.

YARE are the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon YARD verb Gyppan, Gypnan, To Prepare: and it is formed in the accustomed manner, by changing the characteristic letter y to A. YARE means Prepared.

A YARD, to mete, or to measure with (before any certain extent was designated by the word) was called a Met-zeapo, or Mete-zýpo, or Mete-yard, i. e. something Prepared to mete or to measure with. This was its general name: and that prepared extension might be formed of any proper materials. When it was of wood, it was formerly called a YARDWAND, i. e. a Wand prepared for the purpose. By common use, when we talk of mensuration, we now omit the preceding word Mete, and the subsequent Wand; and say singly a YARD.

Yar-en, Yar'n, Yarn, has been already explained (p. 80).

To those participles noticed by me in the beginning of our conversation, and which terminated in ED, T, and EN, I have now added those which are also formed from the same verbs by a change of the characteristic letter. And I may now proceed to other verbs which, by a change of the characteristic 1 or Y, have furnished the language with many other supposed Nouns, which are really Participles.

Dot.—Skinner says "Muci globus vel grumus, fort. a Teut. Dotter, ovi vitellus, i. e. Muci crassioris globus vitello ovi incrassato similis." Johnson says-" It seems rather corrupted from Jot."

Dor is merely the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Dyttan, occludere, obturare, To Stop up, To Shut in. It has the same meaning as Dyrteo, Ditted, occlusum. It is not "made to mark any place in a writing;" but is, what we call, a full stop. The verb To Dit, To Stop up, is used, in its participle, by Douglas:

- "The rivaris DITTIT with dede corpsis wox rede Under bodyis bullerand; for sic multitude Of slauchter he maid, quhil Exanthus the flude Mycht fynd no way to rin unto the see." Booke 5. pag. 155.
 - " _____ gemerentque repleti Amnes, nec reperire viam atque evolvere posset In mare se Xanthus."

These words, though seemingly of such different significations, have all but one meaning: viz. Covered, Hidden. And the only GLADE | difference is in their modern distinct appli-CLOUD] cation or different subaudition.

LID and LOT were in the Anglo-Saxon written Dlo and Dloz; and these, by the change of the characteristic letter 1 to 1 short and to 0 (as Writ, Wrote, Wroot, Wrat, Wrate, of Ppican, To Write*) are the regular past tense,

^{* [}Puttenham in his Arte of English Poesie, speaking of Thomas and therefore past participle of Dhoan, tegere, operire, To Cover. The Anglo-Saxon participle Dho, suppressing the aspirate, is the English Lid, i. e. that by which any thing (vessel, box, &c.) is Covered.

The Anglo-Saxon participle Dloo or Dlot, suppressing the aspirate, is the English Lot, i. e. (something) Covered or Hidden.

"Playeng at the dyce standeth in LOTTE and auenture of the dyce."—Dives and Pauper, 1st comm. cap. 38.

So we say—To draw Lors. And To put any thing to the Lor.

Indifferently with Dhoan our ancestors used Be-hloan and Le-hloan, with the same meaning.

Be-hloo or Be-hloan, tegere; which is become our English BLOT: and you cannot fail to observe that a BLOT upon any thing extends just as far as that thing is Covered, and no further.

Ite-hlyo, Ite-hloo, Ite-hloo, Ite-hloo, is the regular past tense and past participle of Ite-hloan: and Ite-hlao, is become the English GLADE; applied to a spot Covered or Hidden with trees or boughs.

 Where hardly eye mote see bright heavens face."

Ibid. cant. 7. st. 38.]

From the same participle, I suppose, is formed our English word CLOUD*. Gehlod, Gehloud, Gloud, Cloud. For the same reason the Latin word Nubes was formed from Nubere; which means To Cover.—"Quia cœlum Nubit, i. e. operit;" says Varro. And therefore Nupta (i. e. Nubita, Nubta) is Femme Couverte.

In the same manner,

LOCK in the Anglo-Saxon Loc, Beloc, are the re-BLOCK gular past participles of Lycan, Be-lycan, obserare, claudere.

So

LAST in the Anglo-Saxon Dlærte and Be-hlærte, Ballast are the past participles of Dlærtan and Be-hlærtan, onerare. The French Lester is the same word, dismissing the aspirate, and changing the Anglo-Saxon infinitive termination an for the French infinitive termination ER.

[&]quot;CLOUD videtur esse a κλυδων, fluctus, unda; quod nubes undatim veluti fluctuent in media aeris regione: vel quod imbres nubibus fusos horridus undarum de montibus decidentium fragor et minax exestuantium consurgentium que torrentium facies consequi soleat."—. Junius.

[&]quot;CLOUD, Nubes, Minshew deflectit a Claudo; quia percludit et intercipit nobis solem. Somner a Clod et Clodded; quia sc. est vapor concretus: sed utr. violentum est. Mer. Klot, Klotte, nobis Clod, grumus, formare forte an non abs re esset."—Skinner.

BLAZE A BLAZE or Blase is the past tense (used as Blast) a participle) of Blæran, flare: By adding to Blase, the participial termination ED, we have Blased, Blas'd, Blast.

FROST—is the past participle of Fnyran, To Freeze. By the change of the characteristic Y, the regular past tense is prope, which we now write Froze: adding the participal termination ED, we have Frosed, Fros'd, Frost.

[Drum—is the past participle of Dpeman, Dpyman, "To make a joyful noise:" for so the word is used in Psalms 46, 1; 81, 1; 95, 1, 2; &c.

TRUMP and TRUMPET—in Dutch TROMP, TROMPET. Italian, TROMBA, says Menage, "Da Tuba, Truba, Trumba, Tromba, è derivazione indubitata."—And perhaps TRIUMPH-US.

German, trompe, trompette, trommette; Danish, trompette; German, drommeten, or trompeten, To Trumpet; Swedish, trumpet. In Dutch, trom.]

Non—is the past participle of Dnızan, caput inclinare, The past tense of Dnızan is Dnah. By adding to Dnah or Nah the participial termination ED, we have Nahed, Nah'd, Nad (A broad) or NOD.

OAK—A.-S. Aac. of Ican.

Yoke—is the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Le-1can. Ican, addere, adjicere, augere, jungere, gives us the English verb To Ich (now commonly written To Eke).

"I speake too long, but 'tis to peize the time,
To ICH it, and to draw it out in length."

Merchant of Venice, pag. 173.

If c-1can, by the change of the characteristic 1 to 0, gives us the past tense and past participle I coc: which (by our accustomed substitution of Y for I) we now write YOK OF YOKE.

"It is fulle good to a man whan he hath borne the YOK of our Lorde from his youthe."—Dives and Pauper, 1st comm. cap. 21.

This same participle gives the Latin Jug-um, and the Italian Giogo.

OLD by the change of the characteristic I or Y, is the ELD past tense and past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Ylban, Ilban, To Remain, To Stay, To Continue, To Last, To Endure, To Delay, To Defer, morari, cunctari, tardare, differre. And this verb (though now lost to the language) was commonly used in the Anglo-Saxon with that meaning, without any denotation of long antiquity. As we now say—A week OLD, Two days OLD, But a minute OLD.

"As youth passeth, so passeth their beaute. And as they OLDE, so they fade."—Dines and Pauper, 4th comm. cap. 27.

"The tyme that ELDETH our auncestours
And ELDETH kynges and emperours,
The tyme that hath all in welde
To ELDEN folke."

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 121. pag. 2. col. 2.

OPE
CHAPS

OPE (by the change of the characteristic v to o) is the regular past tense of Yppan, aperire, pandere. By adding to which the participal termination EN, we have the past participle OPEN.

A GAP and a GAPE, are the regular past tense and past participle of Le-yppan, by the change of the characteristic Y to A.

A CHAP and CHAPS vary from the foregoing only by pronouncing CH instead of G. But the meaning and etymology are the same.

Poke Pock Pock Pocks

The pock of the characteristic y to o) is the regular past tense and past participle of the Anglo-Saxon Pycan, To Pyke, or To Peck.

"Than cometh the Pye or the rauene and PYKETH out the one eye. Than cometh the fende and PYKETH out ther ryght eye, and maketh them lese conscyence anent God. After he PYKETH out theyr lyste eye."—Diues and Pauper, 9th comm. cap. 7.

"Heretikes shall not thereby PIKE any matter of cauillation against us." Dr. Martin. Of Priestes unlauful Mariages, chap. 10. pag. 145.

Pock is so applied as we use it; because where the pustules have been, the face is usually marked as if it had been picked or pecked. We therefore say pitted with the small pocks (or pox). And the French—picoté de la petite vérole. The French Piquer and Picoter are both from the Anglo-Saxon Pycan.

Menage says—"Picote. On appelle ainsi en Poitou la petite vérole. Ce mot se trouve dans Rabelais, 4, 52." "L'un y avoit la Picote, l'autre le tac, l'autre la vérole." "De piquer à cause que le visage en est souvent marqué."

SMOKE—is the regular past tense and past participle of Smican, fumare.

PIT are the past tense and past participle of the verb Pot of Pit, i. e. To Excavate, To Sink into a hollow.

" Deip in the sorowful grisle hellis POT."

Douglas, booke 4. pag. 108.

"First fayre and wele
Therof much dele
He dygged it in a POT."

Sir T. More's Workes.

Town Notwithstanding their seeming difference, these three (town, tun, ten) are but one word, with one meaning; viz. Inclosed, Encompassed, Shut in: and they only differ (besides their spelling) in their modern different application and subaudition. It is the past tense and therefore past participle (ton, tone, tun, tyne, tene) of the Anglo-Saxon verb Tynan, To Inclose, To Encompass, To Tyne.

F.

To Tyne!

H.

Nay, I will not warrant that use of the word in modern English. "To TYNE (Skinner says) adhuc pro Sepire in quibusdam Angliæ partibus usurpatur: si Verstegano fides sit." Whether the word be now so used, I know not, nor shall I give myself the trouble to inquire. I think it probable; but it is sufficient for my purpose that this verb was commonly so used in that period of our language which we call Anglo-Saxon.

The modern subaudition, when we use the word TOWN, is restricted to—any number of houses—Inclosed to-

^{* [&}quot;The priest with holy hands was seen to TINE

Dryden's Translation of the First Book of Homer's Ilias.]

- gether. Formerly the English subaudition was more extensive, and embraced also any inclosure—any quantity of land &c. inclosed*.
- Sotheli thei dispisiden, and thei wenten awei, another in to his TOUN, for sothe another to his marchaundie."
- "But they made light of it, and went their ways, one to his Farm, another to his merchandise."—Matthew, chap. 22. ver. 5.
- "Whiche thing as thei that lesewiden hadden seyn don, thei fledden, and telden in to the citee and in TOUNES."
- "When they that fed them saw what was done, they fled, and went and told it in the city and in the Country."

Luke, chap. 8. ver. 94.

- "And alle bigunnen togidre to excuse, the firste seide, I have bougt a TOUN, and I have nede to go out and se yt."
- "And they all with one consent began to make excuse. The first said unto him, I have bought a Piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it."—Ibid. chap. 14. ver. 18.
- "And he wente and cleuide to oon of the burgeys of that cuntre, and he sente him in to his TOUN that he shulde fede hoggis."
- "And he went and joined himself to a citizen of that country; and he sent him into his Fields to feed swine."

Ibid. chap. 15. ver. 15.

- "And whanne thei ledden him, thei token sum man Symont of Syrenen, comynge fro the TOUN and thei puttiden to him a cross, to bere aftir Ibesu."
- "And as they led him away, they laid hold upon one. Simon a Cyrenean, coming out of the Country, and on him they laid the cross, that he might bear it after Jesus."—Ibid. chap. 23. ver. 26.

Extract of a Letter to me from Dr. Beddoes, Nov. 25, 1805.]

^{* [}Dr. Beddoes, in a letter to me (H. Tooke) Nov. 25, 1805, says,—" Have you not heard, or did not you choose to mention, that in the W. of Cornwall, every cluster of trees is called a TOWN of trees,—first no doubt from the inclosure, then simply as a group. To TYNE is still a provincialism. To TYNE a gap in a hedge, means at present, to fill it up."

A TUN (tunne) and its diminutive Tunnel (tænel, tenel) is the same participle, with the same meaning; though now usually applied to an inclosure for fluids*.

"Certain persons of London brake up the TUNNE in the warde of Cornhill, and tooke oute certayne persons that thither were committed by Sir Ihon Briton, then custos or gardeyn of the citie."

Fabian. Edwarde 1. pag. 142.

F.

In this derivation of TUN, I suppose you know that you have only all the etymologists of all the languages of Europe against you: for all of them use this word:

^{• [&}quot; TONNA vel TUNNA, vas, ex Germanico et Belgico. TONNE; quo notatur vas vinarium, reive similis. Auctor vitæ Philiberti: 'Rogans eum cellarium ingredi, et vas vinarium, quod TONNA dicitur, benedicere.' Hinc diminutivum TONNELLA, vel TUNNELLA, vasculum. M. Ioannes de Thwrocz in chronicis. Hungaricis, secundæ partis cap, xcvii : 'De vino expensæ sunt centum et octoginta TUNNELLÆ.' Imo et virili genere TONEL-LUS dixere: forte ob diminutionem extrita consona, ut a signum, sigillum, a mamma, mamilla. Petrus Cellensis, lib. ix. Epist. v. 'Habes vinum de vite vera expressum de torculari crucis et attractum aperto ostio lateris. Sicut enim TONELLUS foratur, ut vinum habeatur: sic latus Christi lancea militis apertum est, ut exiret aqua baptismatis, et sanguis nostræ redemptionis.' TONNÆ vel TUNNÆ vocabulo vicinum est TINA: quod legas in Actis Thyrsi et sociorum ad xxviii Jan. 'Tum Sylvanus jussit impleri TINAM aqua, et merso capite ligari pedes ejus sursum, et mediam partem corporis, quæ super aqua esset, flagellis cædi.' Imo et Varro usurpat in iv. de L.L. et in 1. de vita populi Romani, ut quidem utrobique in Conjectancis corrigit Scaliger; qui et apud Festum legit TINA; ubi vulgo, TINIA, vasa vinaria. Utcunque hoc, plane videntur TONNÆ vel TUNNÆ et TINÆ vel TINIÆ, vocabula esse cognata, et ab eadem origine profecta." Vossii de Vit. Serm. lib. 2. cap. 18. pag. 100.]

and they seem to agree that it comes from the Latin Tina, and Tina from the Greek $\Delta siros$.

H.

Do Assos or Tina afford us any shadow of a meaning to the word Tun? If they do not, such derivation is at least nugatory. But Tina has no connection with this doubtful Assos. Tina is itself from Tynan: as heaps of other Latin words, referred to by our etymologists shall in due time be shewn evidently to come from us, and not our words from them.

F.

When different languages have the same word, who shall decide which of the two is original?

H.

This circumstance—Its meaning—shall decide. The word is always sufficiently original for me in that language where its meaning, which is the cause of its application, can be found. And seeking only meaning, when I have found it, there I stop: the rest is a curiosity whose usefulness I cannot discover.

But to proceed in our course.

However strange it may, at first mention, appear to you, TEN (in the Anglo-Saxon* tyn, tin, ten) is likewise the past participle of Tynan.

^{* [}TEN-pa TYN beboda.—id est—The TEN commandments.

You have already seen that the names of Colours have a meaning, as a cause of their denomination; and now you will find that the names of Numerals have also a meaning. So have the Winds, &c. In fact, all General terms must have a meaning, as the cause of their imposition: for there is nothing strictly arbitrary in language.

It is in the highest degree probable that all numeration was originally performed by the fingers, the actual resort of the ignorant: for the number of the fingers is still the utmost extent of numeration. The hands doubled, closed, or shut in, include and conclude all number: and might therefore well be denominated tyn or TEN. For therein you have closed all numeration*: and if you want more, must begin again, TEN and one, TEN and two, &c. to Twain-tens: when you again recommence, Twain-tens and one, &c.

KNOLL In the Anglo-Saxon Enoll, Enyll, is the past KNELL participle of Enyllan, To strike a bell.

Choice—was formerly written chose; and is the past participle of Lipan, eligere, To Chese, as it was formerly written.

"Frely paye the tythe neyther worste ne beste, but as they come to honde without CHOSE.—Dives and Pauper, 7th comm. cap. 13.

^{*} Decem, Δεκα, has also been well derived from Δεχομαι, comprehendo—" παρα το δεχεσθαι και συγκεχωρηκεναι τα γενη παντα των αριθμων.—" Sed hæc (says Vossius) allusio verius quam originatio."

I do not concur with him in this censure.

[[]See Juvenal, Sat. 10. And Cælius Rhodiginus, lib. 23. cap. 12. et sequ.—To count on the right hand, when the number exceeds a hundred.]

" ----- Now thou might CHESE

- "I have sette byfore you lyfe and dethe, good and euyli, blessynge and curse, and therfore CHESE the lyfe."

MINT are the past participle of Ognezian, Ogn-Money sian, notare, To Mark, or To Coin. Mineyed, Minyed, Min'd, Mint: and money, merely by changing the characteristic v to o.—The Latin Moneta* is the past participle of the same Anglo-Saxon verb.

Thong are the past participle of Dpinan, Dpinan, Thin Scherescere, minui. Thong (in the Anglo-Saxon Dponz, Dpanz) was still written throng, long after our language ceased to be called Anglo-Saxon.

"Forsothe a stronger than I shal come aftir me, whos I am not worth to unbynde the THWONG of hise shoon.

Luke, chap. 3. ver. 16.

- "He it is that is to comynge aftir me, whiche is maid bifore me, of whom I am not worthi that I unbynde the THWONG of his shoo."—Iohn, chap. 1. ver. 27.
- "He axed of the kynge so myche grounde as the hyde of a bull or other beste wolde compace, which the kynge to hym graunted. After whiche graunt, the sayde Hengyste to the ende to winne a large grounde, causyd the sayd bestes skyn to be cut into a small and slender THONG.—Fabian, parte 5. chap. 83.

^{*} Vossius tells us that MONETA is from Moneo: "quod ideo MONETA vocatur; quia nota inscripta monet nos autoris et valoris."

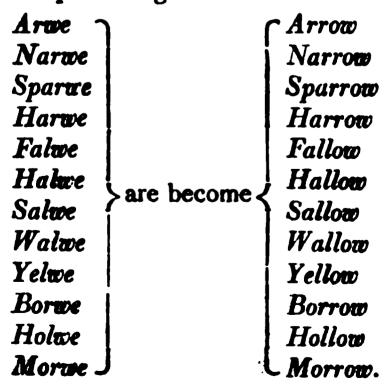

Thin as well as thong, appears to have been fermerly written with a w.

"And then hee sickned more and more, and dried and DWINED away."—Hist. of Prince Arthur, 3d part, chap. 175.

SORRY are one word differently spelled, and in modern English somewhat differently applied; but have all one meaning: and, by the change of the characteristic letter y to o, are the past participle of the Anglo-Shrew Saxon verb Synpan, Synepan, Synepan, To Ver, To Molest, To cause mischief to.

This participle was written in the Anglo-Saxon ropp, roppe, roph, rophy, ropy, rape, rap. And, long after that time, in English sorwe, sorewe, soor, &c. And was, and is, the general name for any malady or disease, or mischief, or suffering; any thing generally by which one is molested, vexed, grieved, or mischieved. And whoever attempts to pronounce the Anglo-Saxon participle sorw, will not wonder that it should have been so variously written*.

The same change in the written signs has taken place in the modern manner of representing similar sounds.

"And Ihesu enuyrownyde al Galilee, techynge in the synagogis of hem the gospel of the rewme, and heelinge al SOREWE, ether ache, and sikenesse in the peple. And his fame wente in to al Sirie, and thei offriden to him alle men hauynge yuel, takun with dyuerse SOORIS and tormentis."

"And Jesus went about all Galilee, teaching in their synagogues, and preaching the gospel of the kingdom, and healing all manner of sickness and all manner of diseases among the people. And his fame went throughout all Syria; and they brought unto him all sick people that were taken with divers diseases and torments."

Matthew, chap. 4. ver. 23, 24.

"Marye Magdaleyn anoynted the blysful fete of our Lorde Ihesu with a precyous oynement. Judas was SOROWE therof and grutched."—Diues and Pauper, 1st comm. cap. 53.

[" —— I am sorrow for thee:

Malone ignorantly says—"This obvious error of the press adds support to Mr. Steevens's emendation of a passage in Much Ado about Nothing."—(i. e. Sorry wag.)]

In the same meaning we say—a sorry tale, a sorry case or condition.

"Her bleeding brest and riven bowels gor'd, Was closed up, as it had not beene SOR'D.

Junius says—"sore, A.-S. pap. Forte est a σωρος, cumulus; ut proprie olim accepta sit vox de tumore in quem ingens purulentæ materiæ copia confluit ac coacervatur. Rectius tamen videri potest desumptum ex Jaça, scabies late diffusa et alte defixa. Vel a ovçur, trahere."

Skinner thinks sore is a contraction from the Latin severus. And the Latin etymologists give us the satisfaction of informing us, that Severus is either satis verus—or secus, hoc est, juxta verum—or semper verus—or secus, venerabilis.

Calling on Itis, Itis evermore,
Whom, wretched boy, they slew with guiltie blades;

Spenser: Virgil's Gnat.]

SHREWD—the past participle of the same verb Syppan, rypepan; not by a change of the characteristic letter, but by adding ED to the indicative. It is rypped, rypeped; which, I doubt not, is our modern shrewed, or shrewd. And ryppe, rypepe, is our modern shrewe, or shrewd: which I believe to be the indicative of rypepan; and to mean,—one who vexes or molests.

Shrew was formerly applied indifferently to Males as well as to Females.

- "The old SHREW Sir Launcelot smote me downe."

 Hist. of Prince Arthur, 2d part. chap. 133.
- "Nay, not so, said Sir Tristram, for that knight seemeth a shrew."—Ibid. chap. 143.
 - "Jacob was a good man, Ezau a SHREWE."

 Diues and Pauper, 1st comm. cap. 20.

"But Vulcanus, of whom I spake, He was a SHREWE in all his youth."

"As our Saviour sayd by the wicked baily, which though he played the false SHREWE for his master, prouided yet willy somwhat for himselfe."—Sir T. More. Confutacion of Tyndale, pag. 461.

BE-SHREW thee! (Be-rypepe, the imperative of Be-rypepian) i. e. Be thou ryppe, rypepe, i. e. vexed—or, May'st thou be vexed, molested, mischieved, or grieved, in some manner.

["Now much BESHREW my manners and my pride."

Junius says—"Ego A.-S. mænizen olim suspicabar desumptum ex Man and Mænne, amplius. Quoniam dies crastinus nihil est aliud quam spatium vitæ ulterius adhuc, eoque lucro apponendum."

^{* [}Mr. Steevens says—" This word, of which the etymology is not exactly known, implies a sinister wish, and means the same as if she had said—Now ill befall my manners &c. Tollet says—" See Minshew's etymology of it, which seems to be an imprecation or wish of such evil to one, as the venomous biting of the SHREW mouse."

See also S. Johnson's nonsense.]

Skinner's good sense does not attempt any explanation.

If we cannot believe with Casaubon (and I think we cannot) that Good morrow is merely the Greek wyathr images; or with Junius, that it means a Day More; you will perhaps be induced to examine the equivalent words of other languages; in hopes of receiving some assistance, hints at least, from the manner in which the equivalent words of other languages are explained by their etymologists. You may be tempted perhaps to inquire after the Greek augus, the Latin Cras, or the Italian and French Dimane and Demain. But spare yourself the trouble. From the numerous labourers in those vine-yards, instead of the grapes you look for, you will gather nothing but thorns.

Let us then trace backward the use of the word in our own language; and try whether we cannot find at home the meaning of this common, useful, and almost necessary word; which our ancestors surely could not have waited for, till the Greeks, or some other nation, were pleased to furnish them with it.

- And plucke nights from me; but not lend a MORROW."

 Richard 2d. fol, 27.
- "They sped theym to a place or towne called Antoygnye and there lodged that nyghte, and uppon the MOROWE tooke their journey toward Normandy."—Fabian's Chronicle, pag. 253, 254.
- Right so in the MORNING, afore day, he mette with his man and his horse. And so king Arthur rode but a soft pace till it was day."—Hist. of Prince Arthur, 1st part, chap, 21.
- "Well, said Queene Gueneuer, ye may depart when ye will. So early on the MORROW, or it was day she tooke her horse."

 Ibid. chap. 73.

"This night abide and washe your feete; And, or the day begin,

You shall rise earely in the MORNE

And so departe againe." Genesis, chap. 19. fol. 37. pag. 1,

"Then Abraham rose early up

In MORNE before the sunne." Ibid. chap. 22. fol. 45. pag. 2.

- "Woo be to you that thynke unproffytable thynge, and werke wycked thynge in your beddes in the MOROWE whan ye may not slepe."—Dives and Pauper, 9th comm. cap. 1.
 - "The nyght is passed, lo the MOROWE graye,

 And Lorde, do Dawe thy holy glade MOROWE."

Ibid. pag. 190.

- "And anoon in the MOREWENDE the heigeste preistis makinge counseil, &c."—Mark, chap. 15. ver. 1.
- "In that nigt thei token no thyng. forsothe the MOREWN maad, Ihesu stood in the brynk."—Iohn, chap. 21. ver. 3. 4.
- "Thei leiden hondis in to hem, and puttiden hem to kepyng til in to the MOREWE, sotheli it was now euen."

Dedis, chap. 4. ver. 3.

"He expowned witnessynge the kyngdom of God, fro the MOREWE til to euentide."—Ibid. chap. 28. ver. 23.

From Morrow, Morro and Morring, we have traced the words back as far as we can go in what is called English, to Morew, Morewn, and Morewende. In the next stage backward of the same language, called Anglo-Saxon, they were written Mepien, Mepzen, Mepne; or Mapzene, Mapne; or Mopp, Mopzen, Mopn. And I believe them to be the past tense and past participle of the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon verb MCKGAN, Mennan, Minnan, Mynnan, To Dissipate, To Disperse, To Spread abroad, To Scatter.

The regular past tense of Myppan (by the accustomed change of y to o) is MORR; which (in order to express the latter R) might well be pronounced and written Morew, as we have seen it was; and afterwards Morowe and MORROW. By adding the participial termination EN to the past tense, we have Mepzen, Mepien, Mep'n; Mapzen, Map'n; Mopzen, Mopn; or Morewen, Morew'n, Mor'n: according to the accustomed contraction of all other participles in our language.

Morrow therefore, and morn (the former being the past tense of Myppan, without the participial termination en; and the latter being the same past tense, with the addition of the participial termination en) have both the same meaning, viz. Dissipated, Dispersed. And whenever either of those words is used by us, Clouds or Darkness are subaud. Whose dispersion † (or the time when they are dispersed) it expresses.

"Dileguate intorno s'eran le nubi.—It was the MOR-ROW or the MORN.

Darkness was antiently supposed to be something positive; and therefore in the first chapter of Genesis we are told—"peortpu pæpon open hæne nipelniffe bnadniffe. God cpæd ha. Gepeonde leoht, and hæt todælde hat leoht rnam ham heortpum, and hæt hat leoht dæz, and ha heortpa niht, ha pær zeponden æpen and monzen an dæz."

"Darkness was upon the face of the deep. God said, Let there be light. And God divided the light from the darkness. And God called the light, day; and the darkness he called night. The evening and the morning (Congen) was the first day."

Oppnense is the regular present participle of Oppnan; for which we had formerly Morewende. The present participial termination ende is, in modern English, always converted to ing. Hence Morewing, Morwing (and by an easy corruption) MORNING.

Pound Pound Pound To Pin or To Pen, is a common English Pin Binn

- "And made Peace porter to PINNE the gates."

 Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 21. fol. 116. pag, 1.
- " PENT up in Utica." Cato.
- "—— Hearke, our drummes
 Are bringing forth our youth: wee'l breake our walles
 Rather than they shall POUND us up: our gates
 Which yet seeme shut, we have but PIN'D with rushes, They'll open of themselves."

 Coriolanus, pag. 5.

["O thou hast a sweet life, mariner, to be PIND in a few boords, and to be within an inch of a thing bottomlesse."

Galathea, (by John Lily,) act 1. sc. 4.]

This modern English verb To Pin or To Pen is the Anglo-Saxon verb Pynoan, includere; whose past participle is POND, POUND, PENN, PIN, BIN; and the old Latin BENNA, a close carriage.

Skinner says—"Pond Minsh. dictum putat quasi Bond, quoniam ibi ligata est (i. e. stagnat) aqua. Doct. Th. H. observat antiquis dictum esse Pand, q.d. patella." He adds, "Mallem deflectere ab A.-S. Pyndan, includere: tum quia in eo pisces, tanquam in carcere, includuntur; tum quia vivarium agro vel horto includitur." Skinner is perfectly right in his derivation; and would have expressed himself more positively than mallem, if he had been aware of that change of the characteristic letter of the verb, which runs throughout our whole language: nor would he have needed to use the vague and general word Deflectere, when he might have shewn what part of the verb it was.

Lye concurs with Skinner—"Pond, stagnum, idem credo habere etymon ac Pound. In hoc different, quod alterum bestias terrenas, alterum aquaticas includit."

DOTARD I believe to be DODER'D (i. e. Befooled), DOTTEREL I the regular past participle of Dybenian, Dybnian, illudere, To Delude*. Dotterel is its diminutive.

^{* [}Skinner says—" To DORR, confundere, obstupefacere; a Teut. Thor, stultus. q. d. stupidum vel stultum facere. Alludit Lat. terreo et Gr. Tupo; sed proculdubio verius etymon est a nostro Dorr, A.-S. Dopa, fucus; q. d. fucum, i. e. ignavum et aculei expertem reddere. Vir rev. deflectit a verbo To Dare, q. d. minaciter provocare."

[&]quot;It is our purpose, Crites, to correct
And punish, with our laughter, this night's sport;
Which our court DORS so heartily intend."

Ben Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, act 5. sc. 1.

["And if some old DOTTERELL trees, with standing over nie them."—R. Ascham, pag. 318.]

"The DOTTEREL, which we think a very dainty dish, Whose taking makes such sport, as man no more can wish; For as you creep, or cowr, or lie, or stoop, or go, So marking you with care the apish bird doth do, And acting every thing, doth never mark the net, Till he be in the snare, which men for him have set."

Poly-olbion, song 25.

This Dotterel-catching (except treacherously shedding the blood of his most virtuous subjects) was the favourite diversion of Charles the second.

Bow Bough rently spelled) whether applied to the inclination of the body in reverence; or to an Buxom engine of war; or an instrument of music; or a particular kind of knot; or the curved part of a saddle, or of a ship; or to the Arc-en-ciel; or to bended legs; or to the branches of trees; or to any recess of the sea shore; or in buildings, in barns or windows; always means one and the same thing: viz. Bended or Curved: and is the past tense and therefore past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Byzan, flectere, incurvare. It will not at all surprize you, that this word should now appear amongst us so differently written as Bow, BOUGH and BAY; when you consider that in the Anglo-Saxon, the past tense of Byzan was written Bozh, Buz, and Beah.

[&]quot;Do it, on pane of the DOR.

Why, what is't, say you?

Lo, you have given yourself the DOR. But I will remonstrate to you the third DOR; which is not, as the two former DORS, indicative; but deliberative."

Ben Jonson. Cynthia's Revels, act 5. sc. 2.]

"The crew with merry shouts their anchors weigh, Then ply their oars, and brush the BUXOM sea."

Dryden. Cymon and Iphigenia.]

STOCK
STOCKING
STICK

All these (viz. rtoc, rtac, rticce; stok, stok-en, stuk, stak, stik, stich) so variously written, and with such apparently different meanings, are merely the same past tense and past participle (differently spelled, pronounced, and applied) of the Anglo-Saxon verb Stican, rtician, To Stick, pungere, figere: although our modern fashion acknowledges only stuck as the past tense and past participle of the verb To Stick, and considers all the others as so many distinct and unconnected substantives.

We have in modern use (considered as words of different meaning)

STOCK—Truncus, stipes, i. e. Stuck: as Log and Post and Block, before explained.—"To stand like a stock."

STOCK—metaph. A stupid or blockish person.

STOCK—of a tree, itself Stuck in the ground, from which branches proceed.

STOCK—metaph. Stirps, family, race.

"Ony man born of the STOKE of Adam."

Declaracion of Christe. By Iohan. Hoper, cap. 7.

STOCK—Fixed quantity or store of any thing.

STOCK—in trade: fixed sum of money, or goods, capital, fund.

STOCK-Lock; not affixed, but stuck in.

"The chambre dore anone was STOKE Er thei haue ought unto hir spoke."

Gower, lib. 7. fol. 171. pag. 1. cot 2.

STOCK—of a gun; that in which the barrel is fixed, or stuck.

STOCK—Handle; that in which any tool or instrument is fixed.

STOCK—Article of dress for the neck or legs. (See stocking.)

STOCKS—A place of punishment; in which the hands and legs are stuck or fixed.

"There to abyde STOCKED in pryson."

Lyfe of our Lady, pag. 35..

STOCKS—in which ships are stuck or fixed.

STOCKS—The public Funds; where the money of [unhappy] persons is now fixed.—[Thence never to return.]

STOCKING—for the leg: corruptly written for STOCK-EN, (i. e. Stok, with the addition of the participial termination en) because it was Stuck or made with sticking: pins, (now called knitting needles.)

STUCCO—for houses, &c. A composition stuck or fixed upon walls &c.

STAKE—in a hedge; Stak or Stuck there.

["Whose voice so soone as he did undertake,
Eftsoones he stood as still as any STAKE."

Faerie Queene, book 5. cant. 3, st. 39.]

STAKE—to which beasts are fastened to be baited—i. e. any thing stuck or fixed in the ground for that purpose.

STAKE—A Deposit; paid down or fixed to answer the event.

STAKE—metaph. Risque; any thing fixed or engaged to answer an event.

STEAK—a piece or portion of flesh so small as that it may be taken up and carried, stuck upon a fork, or any slender sticking instrument. Hence, I believe, the German and Dutch Stuck, Stuk, to have been transferred to mean any small piece of any thing.

STICK—(formerly written sTOC) carried in the hand or otherwise; but sufficiently slender to be Stuck or thrust into the ground or other soft substance.

STICK—A thrust.

STITCH—in needle work (pronounced CH instead of CK) a thrust or push with a needle: also that which is performed by a thrust or push of a needle.

STITCH—metaph. A pain, resembling the sensation produced by being stuck or pierced by any pointed instrument.

The abovementioned are the common uses to which this participle is applied in modern discourse; but formerly (and not long since) were used

STOCK—for the leg; instead of STOCKEN (Stocking.)

STOCK—A sword or rapier, or any weapon that might be thrust or stuck.

VOL. II.

STOCK—A thrust or push.

STUCK—A thrust or push.

The abovementioned modern uses of this participle stand not in need of any instances or further explanation. For the obsolete use of it, a very few will be sufficient.

- "Speed. Item, she can knit.
- "Launce. What neede a man care for a STOCK with a wench, when she can knit him a STOCKE."

Two Gentlemen of Verona, pag. 31.

- " I did thinke by the excellent constitution of thy legge, it was form'd under the starre of a galliard.
- I, 'tis strong; and it does indifferent well in a dam'd colour'd STOCKE."—Twelfe Night, pag. 257.
 - "Which our plain fathers erst would have accounted sin, Before the costly coach and silken STOCK came in."

 Poly-olbion, song 16.
- "To see thee fight, to see thee foigne, to see thee trauerse, to see thee heere, to see thee passe thy puncto, thy STOCK, thy reuerse, thy distance, thy montant."

Merry Wives of Windsor, pag. 47.

- "I had a passe with him, rapier, scabberd, and all: and he gives me the STUCKE in with such a mortall motion, that it is incuitable."—Twelfe Night, pag. 269.
 - "When in your motion you are hot and dry,
 And that he calls for drinke; Ile haue prepar'd him
 A challice for the nonce; whereon but sipping,
 If he by chance escape your venom'd STUCK,
 Our purpose may hold there."

 Hamlet, pag. 276.
 - "The fere affrayit my mind astonit als, Upstert my hare, the word STAKE in my hals."

 Douglas, booke 3. pag. 68.

Though I have no doubt of my explanation of stucco;

yet, standing alone, I ought to give you Menage's account of it. He says, that the French du Stuc, is from the Italian Stucco; and Stucco—"forse dal Tedesco Stuk, che vale Frammento: essendo composto lo Stucco di frammenti di marmo.—Il Sr Ferrari da Stipare."

The Italian stocco and stoccata and the French estoc are the same participle.

F.

Before you quit this word, I wish to know what you will do with Dryden's Stitch-fall'n cheek?

["Mistaken blessing which old age they call,
"Tis a long, nasty, darksome hospital;
A ropy chain of rheums, a visage rough;
Deform'd, unfeatur'd, and a skin of buff;
A STITCH-FALN cheek, (pendentesque genas) that hangs below the jaw;—
Such wrinkles, as a skilful hand would draw
For an old grandam ape, when, with a grace,
She sits at squat, and scrubs her leathern face."

Dryden's Translat. of the Tenth Sat. of Juvenal]

Johnson says—"that perhaps it means furrows or ridges," and that "otherwise he does not understand it."

H.

The woman who knitted his stockings could have told him, and explained the figure by her own mishap.

DRY These words, though differently spelled, and DRONE differently applied, are the same past tense DRAIN and past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Dryzan, excutere, expellere, and therefore siccare.

DRY, siccus, in the Anglo-Saxon Dnyz, is manifestly the past tense of Dnyzan, used participially.

DRONE, excussus, expulsus (subaud. BEE) is written in the Anglo-Saxon Dnan, Dnane, Dnæn. Dnaz (Y in Dnýzan being changed into A broad) is the regular past tense of Dnýzan: by adding to it the participial termination EN, we have Dnazen, Dnaz'n, Dnan (the A broad) pronounced, by us in the South, DRONE.

DRAIN is evidently the same participle differently pronounced, as Dnæn: being applied to that by which any fluid (or other thing) is excussum or expulsum.

RAIL
RAY

All these are the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Ppizan, tegere, To Wrine, To Wrie, to cover, to cloak.

To Wrine, or To Wrie was formerly a common English verb.

^{* [&}quot;ROGUE, vulgari usu profligatissimus nebulo, trifurcifer, τριμαστιγιας, trico, scelus; in legibus nostris, erro, mendicus. Sunt qui deflectunt a Fr. G. Rogue, arrogans, impudens, q. d. Junius says—" Erro, scurra, vagus. Græcis paxos est homo nihili," &c.

- S. Johnson, in a note to The Merry Wives of Windsor, says: "A ROGUE is a wanderer, or vagabond; and, in its consequential signification, a cheat."—Malone's Edition, vol. 1. part 2. pag. 226.
- In his Dictionary he says—"ROGUE, of uncertain etymology."]

Dido, fol. 212. pag. 2. col. 2.

"WRIE the glede, and hotter is the fyre, Forbyd a loue, and it is ten tymes so wode."

Tysbe, fol. 210. pag. 2. col. 1.

The disuse of this verb Ppizan, To Wrine, or To Wrie, has, I believe, caused the darkness and difficulty of all our etymologists concerning the branches of this word which are left in our language*. And yet, I think, this should not have happened to them: for the verb Ppizan is not so intirely lost to the language, but that it has still left behind it the verb To Rig, with the same meaning. Which Johnson (with his wonted sagacity) derives from Ridge, the back. Because, forsooth,—" Cloaths are proverbially said to be for the back, and victuals for the belly."

ROGUE (according to the usual change of the characteristic 1) is the past tense and therefore past participle of Prizan, and means Covered, Cloaked; most aptly applied to the character designated by that term.

It happens to this verb, as to the others, that the change

See in Malone's edition the note on the same passage.]

^{*[&}quot;Ford. Ile Prat her: out of my doore, you witch, you RAGGE, you baggage, you poul-cat, you runnion, out, out: Ile conjure you, lle fortune-tell you." Merry Wives of Windsor. (First Folio,) pag. 55. act 4. sc. 2.

of the characteristic I was not only to o, but also to A. What we call ROGUE, Douglas therefore calls RAY (Z being softened to Y.)

"Thir Romanis ar bot ridlis, quod I to that RAY, Lede, lere me ane uthir lessoun, this I ne like."

Douglas, Prol. of the 8th booke, fol. 239. pag. 2.

Upon this passage, the Glossarist to Douglas says—"RAY seems to signify some name of reproach, as Rogue, Knave, or such like: Or perhaps it may be taken for a Rymer or poetaster, and so allied to the word Ray in Chaucer exp. Songs, Roundels: Or lastly, perhaps it may denote a wild or rude fellow, from the A.-S. Reoh, asper, whence Skinner derives the old English word Ray, mentioned in some of their statutes, explained by Cowel Cloth never dyed: or from the S. Rea (for Roe) as we commonly say, as wild as a Rea. But after all I am not satisfied."

The same word, with the same meaning, is also used in Pierce Ploughman.

"To Wy and to Wynchester I wente to the fayre,
With mani maner merchandise as mi master me hight,
Ne had the grace of Gyle igoo amongest my chaffer,
It had bene unsolde thys seuen yere, so me God helpe;
Than draue I me among drapers, my donet to lerne,
To drawe the lyser a longe the lenger it semed;
Amonge the riche RAYES I rendred a lesson,
To broche them with a packnedle and plitte hem togithers,
And put hem in a presse and pynned them therin,
Til ten yardes or twelue had tolled owte xiii."

Vis. of P. Ploughman, fol. 23. pag. 2.

A ROCK (K instead of G) is the covered part of the machine which spinsters use; I mean covered by the wool to be spun. It was formerly well written ROK, c before k being always superfluous.

"As sche that has nane uthir rent nor hyre,
Bot wyth hyr ROK and spynnyng for to thryffe,
And therwyth to sustene her empty lyffe."

Douglas, booke 8. pag. 256.

["The wyfe came yet
And with her fete
She holpe to kepe him downe,
And with her ROCKE
Many a knocke
She gaue hym on the crowne."

Sir T. More's Workes, pag. 4.

"Sad Clotho held the ROCKE, the whiles the thrid By griesly Lachesis was spun with paine."

Faerie Queene, booke 4. cant. 2. st. 48.]

ROCKET OF ROCHET, part of the dress of a bishop, and formerly of women, is the diminutive of the Anglo-Saxon poc, exterior vestis (the same participle), or that with which a person is covered.

"For there nys no clothe sytteth bette On damosel, than doth ROKETTE. A woman wel more fetyse is In ROKETTE, than in cote ywis: The white ROKETTE ryddeled fayre Betokeneth that ful debonayre And swete was she that it bere."

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 125. pag. 2. col. 2.

" For al so wel wol loue be sette Under ragges as ryche ROCHETTE.

Ibid. fol. 142. pag. 2. col. 2.

Rug, in the Anglo-Saxon Rooc, indumentum, is also the same past participle of Ppizan; the characteristic 1, as usual, being changed also to oo and v.

"Horror assumes her seat, from whose abiding flies.
Thick vapours, that like RUGS still hang the troubled air."

Poly-olbion, song 26.

Ruck also (a very common English word, especially amongst females, though I find it not in any English collection) is the same participle as pooc, and means covered. It is commonly used when some part of silk, linen, &c. is folded over, or covers some other part, when the whole should lye smooth or even.

We may notice in passing, that the old English words To Rouk and To Ruck, are likewise formed from the past tense of Pnizan; and mean, not (as Junius supposes) to lye quiet or in ambush, but simply to lye covered.

- "What is mankynde more unto you yholde Than is the shepe that ROUKETH in the folde."

 Knyghtes Tale, fol. 3. pag. 1. col. 2.
- "Now ryse, my dere brother Troylus,
 For certes it non honour is to the
 To wepe, and in thy bed to ROUKEN thus."

 Troylus, boke 5. fol. 193. pag. 2. col. 2.
- Waytyng his tyme on Chaunticlere to fall,
 As gladly done these homicides all,
 That in a wayte lye to murdre men,
 O false murdrer, RUCKYNG in thy den."

 Tale of Nonnes Priest, fol. 90. pag. 1. col. 1.

We have seen RAY (the past tense of Pnizan) used by Douglas for ROGUE. It is likewise used with the same propriety for ARRAY.

"The thirde the kynge of nacions was
And Tidnall was his name,
These foure did marche in battel RAYE
By armes to trye the same."

Genesis, chap. 14. sol. 25. pag. 2.

"And such as yet were left behinde
Made speede to scape awaie:
And to the mountaynes fledde for life
Forgettinge battel RAIE."

Genesis, chap. 14. fol. 26. pag. 2.

- [" Like as a ship, whom cruell tempest drives
 Upon a rocke with horrible dismay,
 Her shattered ribs in thousand peeces rives,
 And spoyling all her geares and goodly RAY,
 Does make herselfe misfortunes piteous pray."

 Faerie Queene, book 5. cant. 2. st. 50.
 - "I heard a voyce that called farre away,
 And her awaking bad her quickly dight,
 For lo! her bridegrome was in readie RAY
 To come to her; and seeke her loves delight."

 Spenser. Ruines of Time.]

By the addition of the participial termination ED to RAY OF RAIE, we have RAYED, RAIED, OF RAIDE.

"What one art thou, thus in torne weed iclad?

Vertue. In price whom auncient sages had.

Why poorely RAIDE?"—(i. e. poorly RIGGED.)

Songes, &c. By the Earle of Surrey, &c. fol. 107. pag. 1.

ARRAY is the same past tense, with a the usual prefix to the præterit of the Anglo-Saxon verbs; and means Covered, Dressed: and is applied by us both to the dressing of the body of an individual, and to the dressing of a body of armed men.

ARAYNE is the foresaid past tense ARAY with the addition of the participial termination En: Arayen, Aray'n, clothed, dressed, covered.

"Eftir thame mydlit samin went ARAYNE
The uthir Troyanis and folkis Italiane."

Douglas, booke 13. pag. 470.

A woman's Night-RAIL, in the Anglo-Saxon Ræzel, is the diminutive of Ræz or RAY the past tense of Ppizan.

As ROCHET SO RAIL means thinly or slenderly covered. And we have not this word from the Latin Ralla or Regilla, to which our etymologists refer us, without obtaining any meaning by their reference; but Ralla and Regilla are themselves from our northern pæzel: nor is there found for them any other rational reference.

RAILS, by which any area, courtyard, or other place is thinly (i. e. not closely, but with small intervals) covered, is the same word pæzel.

"Furth of the sey with this the dawing springis,
As Phebus rais, fast to the yettis thringis
The chois gallandis, and huntmen thaym besyde,
With RALIS and with nettis strang and wyde,
And hunting speris stif with hedis brade."

Douglas, booke 4. pag. 104.

"—— The bustuous swyne
Quhen that he is betrappit fra hys feris
Amyd the hunting RALIS and the nettys."

Ibid. booke 10. pag. 344.

Of the same meaning and family is the word RILLING (for Rillen, as RAILING for RAILEN;) for that with which the feet are covered.

"Thare left fute and al thare leg was bare,
Ane rouch RILLING of raw hyde and of hare
The tothir fute couerit wele and knyt."

Douglas, booke 7. pag. 238.

A RIG, RIGEL, RIGIL, or RIGSIE, is a male (horse or other animal) who has escaped with a partial castration, because some portion of his testicle was covered, and so hidden from the operator's view.

RIGGING (written, I suppose, corruptly for RIGGEN, i. e. Prizzen) is that with which a ship, or any thing else, is RIGGED (i. e. Prizzed) or covered.

I fear I have detained you too long upon this verb Prizan. And, for our present purpose, it is not necessary to shew you what I think of a ROCK in the sea*; or of a sky-rocket; or of raiment, arraiment, To Rail and To Rally; the real meaning of all which, I believe, the etymologist will find nowhere but in Prizan.

Dross—is the past participle of a KINSAN, Dreoran, dejicere, præcipitare.

Herd Hurdle Hoard, hankel, hond, is the past participle of hypoan, custodire.

HERD is the same participle; and is applied both to that which is guarded or kept, and to him by whom it is guarded or kept. We use it both for Grex and Pastor.

Hurdle, Dynoel, is the diminutive of the same participle Dyno: for (as usual with the change of the characteristic letter) the past tense of Dynoan was written either Dono, Dyno, or Deno.

^{* [&}quot; With rich treasures this gay ship fraighted was;
But sudden storme did so turmoyle the aire,
And tumbled up the sea, that she (alas)
Strake on a ROCK, that under water lay."

At first sight, these words may seem to have nothing in common with each other; little at least in the sound, less in the meaning. Yet are they all the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Scylan, To Divide, To Separate, To make a difference, To Discern, To Skill: and have all one common meaning.

This English verb, To Skill, though now obsolete, has not been long lost to the language; but continued in good and common use down to the reign of Charles the First.

"Shall she worke stories or poetries? It SKILLETH not which."

Endimion, (by John Lilly,) act 3. sc. 1.

["We shall either beg together, or hang together. It SKILS not so we be together."

- "Now see the blindnes of us worldlye folk, how precisely we presume to shoote our folish bolte, in those matters most in whiche we least can SKILL."

Sir T. More. De quatuor nouissimis, pag. 73.

SKILL, as now commonly used, is manifestly Discernment: that faculty by which things are properly divided and separated one from another.

- "Into vii partes I haue this boke dyuyded,
 So that the reder may chose where he wyll.
 The fyrste conteyneth how the Brytons guyded
 This lande from Brute, Moliuncius untyll.
 And from Moliuncius I haue sette for SKYLL
 To the nynthe yere of kynge Cassibelan
 The seconde parte." Fabian. Prologue.
- "I thought that fortitude had been a mean 'Twixt fear and rashness; not a lust obscene Or appetite of offending; but a SKILL And nice discernment between good and ill."

B. Jonson. Underwood.

As we have in English Writ, Wrote, Wroten, Wroot, Wrat, Wrate, and Written, for the past participle of Ppitan, To Write; So the characteristic letter 1 or Y of the verb pcylan, in order to form the past tense, is changed to 1 short, or to A, or to E, or to 0, or to 0A, or to 00, or to 0U, or to 0W, or to U. And here again, as before in pcipan and pcitan (and in all Anglo-Saxon words) pc become indifferently either SH or SK.

Scale, therefore, in all its various applications, as well as shale, shell, shoal or shole, scowl, and scull, will be found to be merely the past participle of rcylan.

- ["——You have found,

 Poly-olbion, song 25.

Mydas (by John Lily), act 4. sc. 3.]

"Now here he fights on Galathe his horse, And there lacks work: anon he's there a foote, And there they flye or dye, like SCALED SCULS Before the belching whale."

Troylus and Cressida, (pag. 103, if paged.)

On this passage of Shakespear, Mr. Steevens (whose notes are almost always useful and judicious; as Mr. [Malone's] are as constantly insipid and ridiculous) gives us the following note:

"Sculls are great numbers of fishes swimming together. The modern editors, not being acquainted with the term, changed it into Shoals. My knowledge of this word is derived from a little book called The English Expositor, London, printed by Iohn Legatt. 1616. Again, in the 26th Song of Drayton's Poly-olbion;

"My silver-scaled SCULS about my streams do sweep."

I forbear to repeat to you the tedious nonsense of [Malone] which he has added to this note: for I think you do not wish to hear (nor, when heard, would you believe) that the Cachalot was—"the species of whale alluded to by Shakespear."

"By this is your brother saued, your honour untainted, the poore Mariana advantaged, and the corrupt deputy SCALED."

Measure for Measure, pag. 72.

On this passage Mr. Steevens mistakingly says,—"To Scale, as may be learn'd from a note to Coriolanus, act 1. sc. 1., most certainly means, To Disorder, To Disconcert, To put to flight. An army routed, is called by Hollinshed, an army scaled. The word sometimes signifies To Diffuse or Disperse; at others, as I suppose in the present instance, To put into confusion."

"——— I shall tell you
A pretty tale, it may be you have heard it,
But, since it serves my purpose, I will venture
To scale 'T a little more."

Coriolanus, act 1. sc. 1.

On this passage Mr. Steevens says,

" To scale is To Disperse*. The word is still used in the North. The sense is—Though some of you have heard the story, I will spread it wider, and diffuse it among the rest.

- "A measure of wine spilt, is called—a scaled pottle of wine,—in Decker's comedy of the Honest Whore: 1635. So, in the Historie of Clyomen, Knight of the Golden Shield, &c. a play published in 1599.

- "In the North they say—Scale the corn, i.e. Scatter it. Scale the muck well, i.e. Spread the dung well.
- "The two foregoing instances are taken from Mr. Lambe's notes on the old metrical history of Floddon Field. Again, Holinshed, vol. 2. pag. 499. speaking of the retreat of the Welchmen, during the absence of Richard 2, says—They would no longer abide, but scaled and departed away.

"In the Glossary to Gawin Douglas's translation of Virgil, the following account of the word is given—Skall, skale, to scatter, to spread, perhaps from the Fr. Escheveler. Ital. Scapigliare, crines passos seu sparsos habere. All from the Latin Capillus. Thus—Escheveler, Scheval, Skail—but of a more general signification." Steevens.

To these instances from Shakespear, and those adduced by Mr. Steevens, may be added the following,

"Ane bub of weddir followit in the taill
Thik schour of rane mydlit full of haill.
The Tyriane menye SKALIS wyde quhare,
And all the gallandis of Troy fled here and thare."

Douglas, booke 4. pag. 105.

He hath in him such faith."

Ibid. pag. 154.

"They may garlicke pill,
Cary sackes to the mil,

Ibid. pag. 145.

And Ray, in his North Country Words, pag. 53, tells us,—"To sheal, to separate: most used of milk. To sheal milk, is to curdle it, to separate the parts of it."

"Coughes and cardiacles, crampes and toth aches, Reumes and radgondes, and raynous SCALLES."

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 21. fol. 112. pag. 2.

You laugh at the derivation from Scapigliare, Escheveler and Capillus, as introduced to account for the antient but now obsolete use of the word SCALE. How much more ridiculous would it appear, if attempted to be applied in explanation of the word SCALE in all its modern uses.

We have—Scale—a ladder*. And thence Scale—of a besieged place.
A pair of Scales.

^{* [&}quot; Tu vuoi udir quant' è che Dio mi pose Nell'eccelso giardino, ove costei A così lunga SCALA ti dispose."

Il Paradiso di Dante, cant. 26.]

A Scale of degrees.

Scale of a fish, or of our own diseased skin.

Scale of a bone.

SCALL, and SCALED (or SCALD) head.

We have also—Shale of a nut, &c.

SHELL of a fish, &c.

SHOAL, SHOLE, or SKUL of fishes.

Scull of the head.

Scowl of the eyes.

SHOULDER.

And finally—Skill,

SHILLING,

And—SLATE.

Now in every one of these, as well as in each of the instances produced of the antient use of the word scale; one common meaning (and only one common meaning) presents itself immediately to our notice: viz. Divided, Separated.

Let us look back upon the instances produced.

The fishes come in shoals, sholes, or sculs (which is the same participle, ye being differently pronounced as shorsk); that is, They come in separate divisions or parts divided from the main body: and any one of these divisions, (shoals or sculs) may very well again be scaled, i. e. divided or separated by the belching whale.

The corrupt deputy was scaled (or shaled, if you please) by separating from him, or stripping off his covering of hypocrisy.

The tale of Menenius was "scaled a little more;" by being divided more into particulars and degrees; told, more circumstantially and at length. That I take to be Shakespear's meaning by the expression: and not the staling or diffusing of the tale; which, if they had heard it before, could not have been done by his repetition. For Menenius does not say that some of them had heard it before: that word some is introduced by Mr. Steevens in his note; merely to give a colour to his explanation of "diffusing it amongst the rest."

Holinshed's army of Welchmen "scaled (i. e. sepa-rated) and departed."

Clyomen's cares were scaled (i. e. separated) from their nestling place.

The Tyrian menye, in Douglas, SKALIT (i. e. separated) themselves wide quhare.

An old sack (as old men best know) is always skalling; i. e. parting, dividing, separating, breaking.

A "raynous (i. e. roynous, from ronger, rogner, royner; whence also AROYNT) SCALL," is a separation or discontinuity of the skin or flesh, by a gnawing, eating forward, malady: As is also a SCALL or Scaled head, called a SCALD head.

["Her crafty head was altogether bald,
And, as in hate of honorable eld,
Was overgrowne with scurfe and filthy SCALD."

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 8. st. 47.]

But I need not, I suppose, apply this same explanation individually to each of the other words mentioned. It applies itself: unless perhaps to scowl, i. e. separated eyes, or eyes looking different ways; which our ancestors termed recoleage. We say only recol: i. e. scowl; subaud. Eyes.

"Than scripture scornid me and A SKILE loked."

Vision of P. Plowman, fol. 53. pag. 1. pass. 11.

(The Germans use Schal for the same.)

In the same manner their name for the testicles, was reallan, i. e. Divided, separated.

SHOULDER, which formerly was, and should still be, written shoulde, is also the past participle of this verb reylan.

"The due fashion of byrthe is this, fyrste the head cometh forwarde, then followeth the necke and SHOULDES."

Byrth of Mankynde, fol. 13. pag. 2. (1540.)

The Latin, Italian, and French words Scala, Scaglia, Eschelle, Echelon*, Escaille, &c. referred to by some of our etymologists as originals, are themselves no other than this same Northern participle. Hence also the French Eschalotte and the Italian Scalogna.

Besides its modern uses, the French formerly employed the word Echelles for certain divisions of their army: and the modern very useful military position is well called Echelon: as Captain James (to whom, for his valuable publications at this time, our [besieged] country is so deeply indebted) informs us in his Military Dictionary.

[&]quot;President Fauchet in his book De la Milice et des Armées, tells us, that by this word (Echelles) were meant several troops of horse: so that Echelle in antient times signified what is now called a Troop."

[&]quot;Echelon, a position in military tactics, where each division follows the preceding one, like the steps of a ladder," &c.

I think it probable that shilling (Dutch, Schelling) may be corruptly written for shillen, or reylen, an aliquot part of a pound. And I doubt not in the least that slate is the past participle of the same verb reylan.

F.

This is singular. What you mention as a bare probability, appears to me doubtless. And where you have not the least doubt, I have the most. The meaning indeed of the past participle of reglan would apply very well to slates, which are thin flakes of stone separated or scaled from each other. But the words themselves seem too far asunder.

H.

We must bring them nearer together. What we now call SLATE, was formerly SCLAT.

"And thei not fyndinge in what parti thei shulden bere hym in, for the cumpany of peple, steigeden up on the roof: and bi the SCLATIS thei senten him down with the bedde in to the myddil."

Luke, chap. 5. ver. 19.

"He buylded a royall mynster of lyme and stone, and countryd it with plates of syluer in stede of SCLATE or leade."

Fabian, parte 5. chap. 131.

I suppose the word to have proceeded thus—skalit, sklate, slate. And I am the more confirmed in this supposition, because our ancestors called slates, Skalge; the Scotch (as I am told by the Glossarist of Douglas) skelly is; and the Dutch call them schalien.

The French Chaloir, Nonchalance, the Italian Non cale,

(" E pien di se, di zelo; ogni mortale Gloria, imperio, tesor, mette in Non cale."—(i. e. It skills not.)

Gierusalemme Liberata.)

and the Latin Callidus; are all from this same northern verb rcylan. And it is not unentertaining to observe how the French, Italian and Latin etymologists twist and turn and writhe under the words. If you have the curiosity to know, you may consult Menage's Orig. Ital. Article CALERE: and his Orig. Franc. Articles NONCHALANT and CHALOIR; and Vossius, Art. CALLIS.

SHAPE SHAPE Shion, To Form, To Prepare, To Adapt.

A shor—formatum aliquid (in contradistinction from a stall) for the purpose of containing merchandise for sale, protected from the weather.

A ship—formatum aliquid (in contradistinction from a Raft) for the purpose of conveying merchandise, &c. by water, protected from the water and the weather.

SHAPE requires no explanation.

SHROUD, SHROUD, in Anglo-Saxon Schuo, vestitus, Shrowds though now applied only to that with which the dead are clothed, is the past participle of Schoan, vestire: and was formerly a general term for any sort of clothing whatever.

"In somer season whan softe was the sonn,
I shope me in to a SCHROUD, as I a schepeherde wer."

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 1.

1 Thus Athelstane commands,

"Epelytane cyning, eallum minum generum binnon mine nic zecybe, hat ic pille hat ze redad ealle pæga an eanm Engligeman (zir ze him habbad, obbe obenne zerindad) rnam tham minna reonma azyre mon hine elce monad ane ambha meler, and an reone rpicer, obbe an nam peonbe iiii peningar and renud ron thelp monba æle zean."

You see here that repud, shroud, means any sort of clothing generally.

F.

Yes. I see the meaning of shroud; but I see something besides, worth more than the meaning of any word—zir ze him habbað!—What, Doubt whether an Englishman could be found so poor as to accept this bounty! Good God! Were Englishmen ever such a people as this? Had they ever such kings? And had their kings such counsellors? And was this the manner of providing (not out of any taxes, but out of the king's own estate) for a poor Englishman, if one could be found, who would accept such provision? Was this my country? And is this my country?*

H.

Oh, this was many ages ago. Long before the reign of Messrs. [Pitt] and [Dundas]. Long before the doctrine was in vogue or dreamed of, which has made so many small men great (small in every sense of the word:) I mean the [traitorous doctrine of giving up our last guinea, to secure a remaining sixpence; and the most precious of our rights, in order to secure the miserable rest:] Like pulling out the stones of an arch (and the key-stone amongst them) to render the edifice the stronger: or surrendering all our strong holds to an enemy, that the rest of the country may enjoy the greater security.

But a truce with Politics, if you please. The business of this country, believe me, is settled. We have no more to give up: until some [Chancellor of the Exchequer] shall find out that grand desideratum of a substitute for bread, as he has already discovered a substitute for money. Till that period arrives, let us pursue the more harmless investigation into the meaning of words.

The shrowds are any things with which the masts of a ship are dressed or clothed.

SPROUT A.-S. Sphote, ppnaut. Sprout is the past Spurt | Sparticiple of Sphotan, ppnytan, germinare, To Shoot out, To Cast forth. Spurt is the same word, by a customary metathesis.

TROUBLE—Is the past participle of Tpibulan, tundere, conterere, pinsere, To Bruise, To Pound, To Vex. The Latin Tribulare is the same word; differing only by a different infinitive termination: Tribul-an, Tribul-are. As many other Latin verbs differ from the Anglo-Saxon verbs only by the different infinitive terminations an, or re.

BROOK
BREECH
BREECHES
BRACCA
BRACHIUM

All these words are merely the same past participle (differently pronounced and written) of the verb BKIKAN, Bnecan, bnæcan, To Break.

BROOK (in the Anglo-Saxon Bnoc) approaches most nearly to our modern past tense BROKE: and indeed this supposed noun was formerly so written.

- "And so boweth furth bi a BROKE, beeth buxome of spech Tyll you fynden a forde, your fathers honourable,
 Wade in that water and wash you wel there."

 Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 6. fol. 29. pag. 2.
 - "And helde the way down by a RROKE syde."

 Cuckowe and Nyghtyngale, fol. 351. pag. 1. col. 1.
- "He lept ouer a BROKE for to fight with the giaunt."

 Hist. of Prince Arthur, 3d part. chap. 79.
- "The eye that scorneth his fader, and despyseth the byrth of his moder, rauyns of the BROKES, that is to saye, fendes of helle BROKES, shall delue out and pyke out that eye."

Dives and Pauper, 4th comm. cap. 1.

"With knyghtly force and violence he entred the sayde cytye (London) and slewe the fore namyd Liuius Gallus nere unto a BROKE there at that daye rynnynge, and hym threwe into the sayd BROKE. By reason wherof long after yt was called Gallus or Wallus BROKE. And at this day the strete where some tyme ranne the sayde BROKE is nowe called Walbroke."

Fabian's Chronicle, 4th parte. chap. 65.

Doctor Th. Hickes was aware that BROOK must be in some manner derived from Bpæcan: and gives this reason for it—"quia rivus exiliens terram perrumpit." And this is very aptly described in Beaumont and Fletcher's Faithful Shepherdess.

"——Underneath the ground,
In a long hollow the clear spring is bound,
Till on you side where the morn's sun doth look,
The struggling water breaks out in a BROOK."

Abroach is Abræc, the regular past tense of bræcan, by the customary addition of the præfix A.

"Hewe fire at the flynt four hundred wynter, But thou haue towe to take it, with tinder or BROCHES, All thy labour is loste."

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 18. fol. 95. pag. 1.

Brack is not far removed from our modern past tense Brake, which is still in use with us as well as Broke; and it approaches still nearer to the past tense as it was formerly written Brak.

- "He biholdinge in to heuene, blesside and BRAK, and gaf looues to disciplis."—Mattheu, chap. 14. ver. 19.
- "Hee feutred his speare and ranne agains Sir Trian, and there either BRACKE their speares all to peeces."

Hist. of Prince Arthur, 2d part. chap. 94.

NECK, in the Anglo-Saxon Dnecc (or Dnezz) may perhaps also be the past tense of Dnizan.

KNUCKLE, in Anglo-Saxon Enucl (perhaps formerly Dnuzel) I suppose to be the diminutive of Dnuz; which may likewise have been the regular past tense of Dnuzan.

I offer the foregoing to you barely as conjecture. But we know that Dnah is perpetually used in the Anglo-Saxon as the past tense of Dnızan: by adding to it the participial termination ED, we have Dnahed, Dnah'd (Abroad); from which, I doubt not, we have our English NoD, i.e. An inclination of the head.

NOTCH Which vary respectively in sound only by NOCK* the immaterial difference of CH or CK, have all one common meaning: and I believe them to be the past participle of the verb Nick To Nick, incidere.

"—— It was your presurmize,
That in the DOLE of blowes your son might drop."

Henry 4, 2d part. pag. 76.

Mr. Steevens, on this passage, says—"The DOLE of blows is the distribution of blows. Dole originally signifies the portion of Alms (consisting either of meat or money) that was given away at the door of a nobleman.

"Now my masters, happy man be his DOLE, say I: Euery man to his business."—Henry 4, 1st part. pag. 54.

Sir J. Hawkins says—"The portion of Alms distributed at Lambeth palace gate, is at this day called the DOLE."

"If it be my luck, so: if not, happy man be his DOLE."

Merry Wives of Windsor, pag. 116.

In all the above passages, and wherever the word is used, DOLE is merely the Anglo-Saxon past participle bal; and has not in itself the smallest reference to Alms, or to the nobleman's gate, or to Lambeth palace; if indeed those places have any distinguished connection with Alms. But DOLE (i. e. Dal) might very well be applied to any things divided, distributed, or Dealt out: and therefore to land-marks, and to blows in a battle, &c.*

See Milton:

" DEALING DOLE among his foes."

^{* [&}quot; He with their multitude was nought dismay'd, But with stout courage turn'd upon them all, And with his brond-iron round about him layd; Of which he DEALT large almes."

In the following passage from Chaucer, there is no allusion to any of these.

"And for thou trewe to love shalt be,
I wyl, and eke commaunde the,
That in one place thou set al hole
Thine hert, without halfin DOLE."

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 131. pag. 1. col. 2.

As it has happened in the interpretation of DOLE; so does it with DOWLE: and so will it usually happen, when the interpreters seek the meaning of a word (or rather endeavour to collect it) singly from the passages in which the word is found: for they usually connect with the unknown word, the meaning of some other word or words in the sentence. A little regard to the individual etymology of the word whose meaning is sought, would secure them from this perpetually repeated error; and conduct them to the intrinsic meaning of the word.

"——The elements
Of whom your swords are temper'd, may as well
Wound the loud windes, or with bemockt-at stabs
Kill the still-closing waters, as diminish
One DOWLE that's in my plumbe." (plume.)

Tempest, pag. 12.

Mr. Steevens here tells us, that—"Bailey, in his Dictionary, says that DOWLE is a Feather; or rather the single particles of the Down."

To which Mr. Malone adds—"Cole, in his Latin Dictionary, 1670, interprets—young DOWLE—by Lanugo."

But oal, oæl, dolle, doule, dowle, deal, dell, are all but one word differently pronounced and differently written; and mean merely a part, piece, or portion, without any designation of Feather or Down, or Alms, or any other thing. And when the cards are Dealed or Deals round to the company within doors; each person may as properly be said to receive his Dole or Dowle (i.e. that which is Dealed out, Distributed, or Deals to him) as the attendant beggars at the gate.

Thus Chaucer, in the Plowman's Tale, fol. 99. pag. 2. col. 2.

"The gryffon grynned as he were wood, And loked louely as an owle, And swore by cokes hert bloode He wolde him tere every DOULE."

What think you is contained in this threat of the gryffon! That he will tear off the feathers, or the small particles of Down from the pelican! Surely not. But that he would tear him, as we say, piecemeal; tear every piece of him, tear him all to pieces.

Skinner is of opinion, and reasonably, that DOLLAR also belongs to bal, portio—"quia sc. est aurei, seu, ducati dimidium."

Large-BRIM'D (or be-nym'd) is widely extended in breadth.

GROOM]—We apply this name to persons in various situations. There is a GROOM of the stables, a GROOM of the chambers, a GROOM of the stole, a GROOM porter, a Bride-GROOM, &c. But all of them denote attendance, observance, care, and custody; whether of horses, chambers, garments, bride, &c.

The greene-wood long did walke, and wander wide,
At wilde adventure, like a forlorne wefte:
Till on a day the Satyres her espide,
Straying alone withouten GROOME or guide.
Her up they tooke, and with them home her ledd."

Faerie Queene, book 3. cant. 10. st. 36.

"Ne wight with him for his assistance went,
But that great yron GROOME, his gard and government."

1bid. book 5. cant. 4. st. 3.]

"He is about it, the doores are open:
And the surfeted GROOMES doe mock their charge
With snores."

Macbeth, pag. 136. col. 2.

GROOM therefore has always one meaning. It is applied to the person by whom something is attended. And, notwithstanding the introduction of the letter R into our modern word GROOM, (for which I cannot account) I am persuaded that it is the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Lyman, curare, regere, custodire, cavere, attendere*; and that it should be written GOOM, without the R. And I think it a sufficient confirmation of my opinion, that what we now call Bride-GROOM, our ancestors called Bpid-zum. And, at present, in the collateral languages there is no R;

The Germans calling him—Brauti-gam.
The Dutch . . . Bruide-gom.
The Danes . . . Brud-gom.
And the Swedes . . . Brud-gumme.

^{* [&}quot; For pæpa kininga geleagleagte pe popleton heopa dpikten and pæg policer GIMELEASTE pe ne GIMDE goder."

Elfric. de Veteri Testamento, pag. 16.]

Mr. Steevens on this passage, says—"Swoor is the descent of a bird of prey on his quarry. It is frequently however used by Drayton in his Poly-olbion, to express the swift descent of rivers."

Drayton has used it in his Poly-olbion only three times: in his first, sixth, and twenty-eighth songs; but never as a substantive.

- " Proud Tamer swoops along with such a lusty train,
 As fits so brave a flood." Song 1.
- "Thus as she SWOOPS along with all that goodly train." Song 6.
- "And in her winding banks, along my bosom led,
 As she goes swooping by." Song 28.

In this use of the word by Drayton there is nothing antique, or unusual, or in the least different from the common, modern, every day's use of the word: if we except only the spelling of it. Put sweeps and sweep-ing instead of swoops and swooping, and no man would ask for an interpreter.

With present sums th' unwary spendthrift's need,
You sold your kindness at a boundless rate;
And then o'erpaid the debt from his estate:
Which, mould'ring piece-meal, in your hands did fall;
Till now at last you came to SWOOP it all."

Dryden's First Part of the Conquest of Granada, act 1. sc. 1.]

The Anglo-Saxon verb is Spipan, in modern English To Sweep. Swoop and swop are (as we have already seen in so many other instances) its regular past participle, by the change of the characteristic 1 to o.

Swoop has nothing to do with the descent of a bird; or with any descent or ascent; but it may be applied to either: for it has to do with a body in motion, either ascending, descending, or horizontal; and with a body removing all obstacles in its passage.

A swor between two persons, is where, by the consent of the parties, without any delay, any reckoning or counting, or other adjustment of proportion, something is Swept off at once by each of them.

Swoon—This word was formerly written, Swough, swowe, swowne, aswowne, swond, sowne, and sownd.

"That what for fere of slaunder, and dred of deth She loste both at ones wit and breth And in a SWOUGH she lay."

Chaucer. Lucrece, fol. 215. pag. 2. col. 2.

- "I fel in suche a slomber and a SWOWE,
 Nat al a slepe, ne fully wakynge,
 And in that SWOWE methought I herde sing
 The sorie byrde the leude cuckowe."

 Cuckowe and Nyghtyngale, fol. 351. pag. 1. col. 2.
- "Whan she this herd, ASWOUNE down she falleth."

 Clerke of Oxenfordes Tale, fol. 51. pag. 1. col. 1.
- "ASWOUNE I fel, bothe deed and pale."

 Rom. of the Rose, fol. 128. pag. 2. col. 1.
- "Whan this woman sawe this sharte and redde the letter, she felle downe in swowne." Dives and Pauper, 6th comm. cap. 15.
- "Hee tooke such a hartily sorrow at her words, that he fell downe to the floore in a SWOND. And when Sir Launcelot awaked of his SWOND hee lept out at a Bay window."

Hist. of Prince Arthur, 3d part. chap. 8.

" Hee fell downe off his horse in a SOWNE."

Ibid. 2d part. chap. 59.

"Hee fell ouer his horse mane in a SOWND." Ibid. chap. 140.

Swoon &c. is the past participle of Sprgan, stupere; whose regular past tense is Swog, or Swoug, written by Chaucer Swough and Swowe: adding to which the participal termination EN, we have Swowen, Swowne; and with the customary præfix A, Aswowne.

CLOCK The past participle of the verb To Click.

Puddle Pool Puddle was antiently written Podell.

"And all the contre whiche was byfore lykened to paradyse for fayrenesse and plente of the contre, tourned in to a foule stynkynge PODELL, that lasteth in to this daye, and is called the deed see."

Diues and Pauper, 6th comm. cap. 16.

It is the regular past tense and past participle of the verb To Piddle.

Pool is merely the contraction of Podel, Poolle, Pool.

F.

I hardly think the word Piddle to be of any long standing in the language; as the word Pool (or Pul, as the Anglo-Saxons wrote it) certainly is. There is no antient authority, I believe, for the use of the word Piddle: and yet, to justify your derivation, it ought at least to be as antient in the language as the Anglo-Saxon Pul.

H.

I cannot produce any Anglo-Saxon or antient authority for it. Yet it cannot be of very modern introduction; since it long ago furnished a name to one of our rivers.

"Whilst Froom was troubled thus, where nought she hath to do,
The PIDDLE, that this while bestirr'd her nimble feet,
In falling to the POOL, her sister Froom to meet,
And having in her train two little slender rills,
Besides her proper spring, wherewith her banks she fills,
To whom since first the world this later name her lent,
(Who antiently was known to be instilled Trent)
Her small assistant brooks her second name have gain'd."
Poly-olbion, song 2.

BEAD—The past participle of Biodan, orare, To BID, to invite, to solicit, to request, to pray.

BEAD (in the Anglo-Saxon Beade, oratio, something prayed) is so called, because one was dropped down a string every time a prayer was said, and thereby marked upon the string the number of times prayed.

["Silly old man, that lives in hidden cell,

Bidding his BEADES all day for his trespas."

Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 1. st. 30.

"All night she spent in bidding of her BEDES."

Ibid. cant. 10. st. 3.]

GEWGAW What we write GEWGAW is written, in the GAUD Anglo-Saxon, Lezar. It is the past participle of the verb Le-ziran: and means any such trifling thing as is given away or presented to any one*. Instead of GEWGAWES it is sometimes written GIGAWES and GEWGAUDES.

"And of Holy Scriptures Sawes
He counteth them for GIGAWES."

Skelton, pag. 171. (Edit. 1736.)

^{[*} I doubt this etymology. GAUD and GEWGAW, are rather Le-co and Le-zeao, from Caoian and Le-caoian.—H. T.]

GAUD has the same meaning, and is the same as the foregoing word, with only the omission of the præfix GE, GI, or GEW. It is the past participle of Lipan; Gaved, G

LAUGH—Is the regular past tense and past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Dhhan, ridere; viz. Dlah, which we write LAUGH. "Vox Dlahan (says Skinner) licet apud Somnerum non occurrit, non dubito quin alim in usu fuerit." Had Skinner been aware of the regular change of the characteristic letter in all the Anglo-Saxon verbs, he would have been well contented with Dhhan; but certainly there remained for him the Gothic haahgan, though not the Anglo-Saxon Dlahan.

WHARF Are the pastparticiples of Dpynran, Pynpan; WARP ambire, projicere.

Wall—Is the past participle of Yilan, connectere, copulare, To Join together, To Consolidate, To Cement. And its meaning is singly, consolidated, cemented, or joined firmly together. The Anglo-Saxon Peal is sometimes applied by them in the same manner in which alone we now use it; viz. for any materials, brick, stone, mud, clay, wood, &c. consolidated, cemented, or fastened together: But it is also sometimes used by them for the cement itself, or that by which the materials are connected.

"Dig hærbon týgelan rop jean. and týppan rop Peallum."
"They had brick for stone, and sline had they for Mortur."

Genesis, chap. 11. ver. 3.

Our etymologists derive WALL from the Latin Vallum*:

^{* &}quot;VALLUM dicebatur—Murus e terra ad fossæ oram aggestus, crebris sudibus sive palis munitus—Itaque duæ ejus partes, agger sive terra, et pali sive sudes. De etymo sic Varro, lib. iv. de

and not only the English word, but the Anglo-Saxon Peal also from the same. They seem to forget that the Latin is a mere modern language, compared with the Anglo-Saxon. The Roman beginning (even their fable) is not, comparatively, at a great distance. The beginning of the Roman language we know; and can trace its formation step by step. But the Northern origin is totally out of sight; is intirely and completely lost in its deep antiquity. Besides, in deriving WALL from Pilan, we follow the regular course of our whole language, without the least contorsion; and we arrive at once at a full and perfect meaning, and a clear cause of the application of the word to the thing. But, if we refer WALL to Vallum, what have we obtained? We must seek for the meaning of Vallum, and the cause of its application: and that we shall never find but in our own language: none of the Greek or Latin etymologists can help us to it: for Vallum

L. L:-Vallum, vel quod ea varicare nemo possit:-vel quod singula ibi extrema bacilla furcillata habent figuram litera v. Quamvis enim, quia valli agger jactu aut aggestione terræ fieret, vallum et vallare non inepte deduci queant a Græco βαλλω; tamen cum non omnis agger sit vallum, sed tum demum id nomen adipiscatur, cum munitus est vallis sive sudibus: quin a vallus VALLUM dicatur, dubitandum minime censeo. RICHES

A RACK of hay, and a RICK of hay, are the past participle of KIKGAN, congerere, colligere, To Collect, To Draw together, To RAKE together.

A RAKE, the same participle; it being the tool or instrument by which the Hay is collected.

["The sonnes must bee masters, the fathers, gaffers; what we get together with a RAKE, they cast abroad with a forke."

Mother Bombie (by John Lily), act 1. sc. 3.]

RICH and RICHES are the same participle. Throughout the language the different pronunciation of ch and ck is not to be regarded. Thus, what we pronounce RICH and RICHESSE (sh), the French pronounce RICHE and RICHESSE (sh), and the Italians RICCO and RICHEZZA (k). But it is the same word in the three languages: and it applies equally to any things, collected, accumulated, heaped, or (as we frequently express it) RAKED together; whether to money, cattle, lands, knowledge, &c.

SALE] is the past participle of Sylan, dare, tra-HANDSEL] dere, To Sell. In our modern use of the word a condition is understood. HANDSEL is something given in hand.

HARANGUE—In Italian Aringa, in French Harangue; both from our language.

This word has been exceedingly laboured by a very numerous band of etymologists; and upon no occasion have their labours been more unsuccessfully employed. S. Johnson, as might be expected, has improved upon all his predecessors: and as he is the last in order of time, so is he the first in fatuity. He says—"Perhaps it comes from Orare, or Orationare, Oraner, "Aranger, Haranguer."

I will not trouble you with a repetition of the childish conjectures of others, nor with the tedious gossiping tale of Junius.

Skinner briefly mentions a conjecture of Menage; and he spells the word properly, in the old English fashion, HARANG; and not (à la françoise) HARANGUE.

The word itself is merely the pure and regular past participle, Dnanz, of the Anglo-Saxon verb Dninzan, To Sound, or to make a great sound. (As Dnino is also used.) And M. Caseneuve alone is right in his description of the word, when he says—"Harangue est un discours prononcé avec contention de voix."

So far has the manner of pronunciation changed with us, that, if the commencing aspirate before R was to be preserved, it was necessary to introduce an A between H and R; and instead of HRANG, to pronounce and write the word HARANG." YARD YARD, in the Anglo-Sax. Leapo, is the GARDEN past tense and therefore past participle of the verb Lyndan, cingere, To Gird, To Surround, To Inclose: and it is therefore applicable to any inclosed place; as Court-YARD, Church-YARD, &c.

GARDEN is the same past tense, with the addition of the participial termination En. I say, it is the same; because the Anglo-Saxon L is pronounced indifferently either as our G or Y.

Though it is not immediately to our present purpose, you will not be displeased, if I notice here, that a Girth is that which Girdeth or Gird'th any thing: that a Garter is a Girder; that we have in Anglo-Saxon the diminutive Lypoel, or Girdle; and that I suppose the verb Lypoelan, whose present participle would be Lypoelano, encircling, surrounding; and (for which we now employ ing) being the Anglo-Saxon and old English termination of the participles present: and that I doubt not that Lypoelano, Lypolano, Lypolano, has become our modern Garland.

The Italian Giardino and Ghirlanda*, and the French Jardin and Guirlande have no other origin.

^{* &}quot;GHIRLANDA (says Menage) è voce presa peravventura dal partefice futuro passivo del verbo ghirlare, non usato, che venga da girare, dice il Castelvetro. E cosa certissima. Certainly these words do not, at first sight, appear to have the least connection with each other. And, till the clew is furnished, you may perhaps wonder why I have thus assembled them together.

The verb Stigan, ascendere, to which STILE the language; but has not been long lost.

STIRRUP For it survived that period of the language which we call Anglo-Saxon; and descended in very good and frequent use to that period of the language which we now call Old English: a name hereafter perhaps to be given by our successors to the language which we talk at present.

Instances enough may be found of the use of this verb reigan, from the time of Edward the third down even to the end of the fifteenth century. And though it has itself most strangely disappeared for the last two hundred years; it has still left behind it these its surviving members.

In that old translation of the New Testament which was very much, though surreptitiously, circulated in the reign of Edward the third and afterwards, (and of which many other manuscripts remain, beside the curious one which you have given to me) we have seen the word perpetually employed in Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, in the Epistles, in the Acts, and in the Revelations. Let us turn to a few instances.

[&]quot;Anoon Ihesu constreynide the disciplis to STEIGE in to a boot."—Mattheu, chap. 14. ver. 22.

[&]quot;The whiche seyden by spirit to Poul, that he shulde not STIE to Ierusalem."—Dedis, chap. 21. ver. 4.

- "But whanne thou shalt be bedun to feest, go and sitte doun in the laste place, that whanne he shal come that bad thee to feest, he seie to thee, frende STEIGE heiger."—Luke, chap. 14. ver. 10.
- "The firste vois that I herde, as of a trumpe, spekynge with me, seiynge, STY up hidur."—Apocalips, chap. 4. ver. 1.
- "Forsoth Ihesu took twelve disciplys, and seide to hem, lo we STIEN to Ierusalem."—Luke, chap. 18. ver. 31.
- "To ech of us grace is gouen up the mesure of the gyuyng of Crist, for whiche thing he seith, he STEIGYNGE in to heig, led caitifte caitif."—Ephesyes, chap. 4. ver. 7, 8.

 1bid. chap. 20. ver. 17.
- "And whanne he STEIG into a litil ship, hise disciplis sueden him."—Matheu, chap. 8. ver. 23.

But we need not turn to any more places in this little book; where the word is used at least ninety times.

The same word is constantly employed by Gower, Chaucer, Lydgate, Fabian, Sir T. More, &c, &c.

"And up she STIGHE, and faire and welle She drofe forth by chare and whelle Aboue in the ayre amonge the skies."

 - "That was ambition, rash desire to STY,
 And every linck thereof a step of dignity."

 Fueric Queene, book 2. cant. 7. st. 46.]*

Chaucer does not mean—There are no stairs to STY one; but—there are no stairs to STY on, to ascend upon.]

^{* [}On this passage, T. Warton says;—"The lexicographers inform us, that STY signifies to soar, to ascend. STY occurs often. This word occurs in Chaucer's Test. of Love, p. 480. edit. Urry—'Ne steyrs to STEY one is none: where it is used actively, to lift one up."

Mr. Warton mistakes the passage; being misled by Chaucer's spelling. STEY is not here used actively. One is here thus written for on or upon.

If more were necessary to confirm the claim of reigan to a place in our language, much more might be drawn from a variety of quarters; but I suppose the foregoing instances to be amply sufficient; and you may perhaps think them too many.

Being now in possession of this verb, let us proceed to its application. And first for STAGE.

- 1. We apply STAGE to any elevated place, where comedians or mountebanks, or any other performers exhibit; and to many other scaffoldings or buildings raised for many other purposes. As,
- "At the said standarde in Chepe was ordeyned a sumptuouse STAGE, in the whiche were sette dyners personages in rych apparell."—Fabian, vol. 2. pag. 334.
- 2. We apply STAGE to corporeal progress. As,—At this Stage of my journey—(Observe, that travelling was formerly termed "STEIGING;" to Jerusalem, or any other place)—At this Stage of the business.—At this Stage of my life.—As,
 - "And O thou young and wourschipful child, quhais age
 Is to my youthede in the nerrest STAGE."

 Douglas, booke 9. pag. 285.
- 3. We apply STAGE to degrees of mental advancement in or towards any knowledge, talent, or excellence. As,
 - "Bot Turnus stalwart hardy hye curage,
 For all this fere dymynist neuir ane STAGE."

 Douglas, booke 10. pag. 325.
- 4. And besides the above manners of applying this word STAGE, our ancestors likewise employed it where the French still continue to use it; for their word Estage, Etage, is merely our English word STAGE; though, instead of it, upon this occasion we now use STORY.

- "Architriclynus, that is, prince in the hous of thre STAGIS."

 Ioon, chap. 2. ver. 8.
- "Sotheli sum yong man, Euticus bi name, sittynge on the wyndow, whanne he was dreynt with a greuous sleep, Poul disputynge long, he led bi sleep felde doun fro the thridde STAGE or sopyng place."—Dedis, chap. 20. ver. 9.

For stage, in this last passage, the modern translation puts LOFT; which (as we have already seen) is an equivalent participle.

Now I suppose that in all these applications of it, you at once perceive that ASCENT (real or metaphorical) is always conveyed by the word STAGE: which is well calculated to convey that meaning; being itself the regular past participle of reizan.

STAG is the same past participle. And the name is well applied to the animal that bears it*. His raised and lofty head being the most striking circumstance at the much longer than the hind legs; but the shoulders are of a vast length, which gives the disproportionate height between the fore and hind parts: &c. The latest and best description of this extraordinary quadruped is given in the 16th number of a work intitled, 'A Description of the uncommon Animals and Productions in the Cabinet and Menagerie of His Serene Highness the Prince of Orange, by Mr. Vosmær, &c.' All the accounts we have of the giraffe, agree in representing its hind quarters as about 2½ feet lower than its withers, &c..... The giraffe here described, which Mr. Gordon, who dissected it, says was the largest he had ever seen, was 15 feet 4 inches Rhinland measure (about 15 feet 10

Vosmær declares, that he has been assured by some very respectable inhabitants of the Cape, that they had seen and killed giraffes which, including the horns, were 22 Rhinland feet in height, &c. &c.

- "2. The Elk, Alces, or Moose Deer, &c. This is the bulkiest animal of the deer kind, being sometimes 17 hands high, &c. In Siberia they are of a monstrous size, particularly among the mountains, &c.

* [A HORSE is so denominated from his obedience and tractubleness.

In the Anglo-Saxon hepan and heopan is To Hear and To Obey. (In the same manner Audire and Axous, signify both To Hear, and To Obey.)

Diprumian, hýprian, and hýprimian, and heoprimian mean To Obey.

byprumnerre, obedience.

Donrlice means obediently.

Deopy and hopy (Anglice HORSE) is the past participle of Dyprian, To Obey.]

The swiftness of these animals; the order which they are said to observe in swimming; and the sharpness of their horns; these three distinct properties have induced Minshew, Junius, and Skinner to attempt respectively three different derivations of STAG. In which I think they fail*.

STACK is the same past participle (pronouncing K for G). Junius supposes it to be the same word as STAKE.—
"Stacar A.-Saxonibus erant stipites: atque inde fortasse cumulus fæni, aliarumque rerum, STACK dictus est: Quod perticam longam acuminatamque alte satis terra infigebant, circa quam fænum undiquaque congestum in metam æqualiter assurgeret."

But how would this notion of the word, do for a STACK of chimnies? I fear he was a worse farmer than etymologist: for I do not believe that a STACK of hay or of wood was ever so Raised by any one, in any country, at any time.

STALK, applied by us at present only to plants, I be-

Junius says—"STAGG. Cervus. Fortasse est a Zrezzo, ordine incedo. In cervis certe gregatim prodeuntibus mirum ordinem deprehendunt quibus ea res curæ. Præcipue tamen admirabilis est ordo, quem tenent maria transnatantes. Maria tranant gregatim nantes porrecto ordine (inquit Plin. N. H. viii. 32.) et capita imponentes præcedentium clunibus, vicibusque ad terga redeuntes. Hoc maxime notatur a Cilicia Cyprum trajicientibus. Nec vident terras, sed in odorem earum natant."

Skinner says—"STAG Minsh. deflectit a Etsixo, curro: sed Etsixo nusquam curro; sed Eo ordine, et Eo exponitur.——Nescio an ab A.-S. Stican. Teut. Stechen, Stecken, pungere.——Quia sc. Cornua acuta habet quibus pungere aptus natus est."

lieve to be the same participle*; and perhaps it should be written STAWK (as we pronounce it) or STAK (the A, as formerly, broad): and indeed the L may have been introduced to give the broad sound to our modern A. This however is only my conjecture, being unable otherwise to account for the introduction of L into this word, whose meaning is evident. This etymology, I think, is strengthened by the antient application of the word STALK to the rounds, or steps, or STAIRS of a ladder.

"He made him ladders three
To clymben by the ronges, and the STALKES
Into the tubbes hongyng by the balkes."

Myllers Tale, fol. 14. pag. 1. col. 2.

It is not impossible that the L may have been introduced here, for the sake of the rime to balkes: it certainly is a liberty often taken both by Gower and Chaucer, and by our other antient rimers.

As the verb reigan was variously pronounced and variously written, steig, stye, stie; Some sounding and writing the G; some changing it to Y; and some sinking it altogether: So consequently did its participles vary.

We have already noticed STAG, STAGE, STACK, STALK; in which the G hard, or the G soft, or its substitute K, is ^{* [&}quot;Like as the seeded field greene grasse first showes,

Then from greene grasse into a STALKE doth spring,
And from a STALKE into an eare forth-growes,
Which eare the frutefull graine doth shortly bring;
And as in season due the husband mowes
The waving lockes of those faire yeallow heares,
Which bound in sheaves, and layd in comely rowes,
Upon the naked fields in STALKES he reares."

Spenser. Ruines of Rome.

retained: and we must now observe the same past participle of reigan, without either G or K; viz. stay.

- "Ane port there is, quham the Est fludis has
 In manere of ane bow maid boule or bay,
 With rochis set forgane the streme full STAY
 To brek the salt fame of the seyis stoure."

 Douglas, booke 3. pag. 86.
- "Portus ab Eoo fluctu curvatur in arcum,
 Objectæ salsa spumant aspergine cautes.

 Ipse latet: gemino demittunt brachia muro
 TURRITI scopuli, refugitque a littore templum."

The Glossarist of Douglas, in explanation, says—"STAY, steep: as we say, Scot.—A STAY brae, i.e. a high bank of difficult ascent: from the verb Stay, to stop or hinder; because the steepness retards those who climb it; as the L. say, iter impeditum, loca impedita.—Or, from the Belg. Stegigh, præruptus."

I think the Glossarist wanders.—" Rochis full STAY," are—very HIGH rocks. And a "STAY brae," is a HIGH bank. Without any allusion to, or adsignification of, the difficulty of ascent. Nor is there any word, either in the original or in the translation, which alludes to delay or iter impeditum. Nor does it appear that they were præruptæ cautes. But these objectæ cautes are afterwards called Turriti scopuli. And the purpose of this description is barely to account for the port itself being hidden: ipse latet: for which purpose their height was important. But the Glossarist was at a loss for the meaning of the epithet STAY; and therefore he introduces difficult ascent, and præruptus; giving us our choice of two derivations; viz. either from our English verb To Stay, i. e. to delay:

or from the Dutch Stegigh. But neither of these circumstances are intended here to be conveyed by the poet: and Douglas knew too well both his author and his duty, to introduce a foreign and impertinent idea, merely to suit his measure or his rime.—Stay means merely reaz, raised, high, lofty.

STAIR, in the Anglo-Saxon rtæzen, and still in the Dutch Steiger, I must not at present call a participle (whatever I may venture to do hereafter;) for fear of exciting a premature discussion. STAIR means merely an Ascender. The change from rtæzen to stair, has been in the usual course of the language. First the c gave place to the softer y, and has since been totally omitted. Chaucer wrote it STEYER; and the verb To Steig he wrote To Stey.

"Depe in thys pynynge pytte with wo I lygge ystocked, with chaynes lynked of care and tene. It is so hye from thens I lye and the commune erth, ther ne is cable in no lande maked, that myght stretche to me, to drawe me into blysse, no STEYERS to STEY is none."—Testament of Loue, fol. 203. pag. 2. col. 2.

Fabian in the reign of Henry 7. continues to write it in the same manner.

- "Then the saied 11 dead corses were drawen downe the STEYERS without pitie."—Chronicle, vol. 2. pag. 294.
- "At Bedforde this yere at the keping of a Shire daie, by the fallyng of a STEYER, wer xviii murdered and slaine."

Ibid. pag. 434.

["Others number their yeares, their houres, their minutes, and step to age by STAIRES: thou onely hast thy yeares and times in a cluster, being olde before thou remembrest thou wast young."

Endimion (by John Lily) act 4. sc. 3.]

Story, which the French denominate Estage, E'TAGE*, and which (as we have seen in a foregoing instance) was formerly in England also called a STAGE, is merely—Stagery, Stayery, (the A broad) Stawry or Story, i. e. A set of Stairs. As Shrubbery, Rookery, &c. a number or collection of shrubs; a number or collection of rooks, &c. The termination ERY, for this purpose, to any word, is a modern adoption of our language, and the term therefore comparatively modern: but the meaning is clear; and the derivation at least unrivalled †.

STY, on the eye. Skinner says well—"tumor palpebræ phlegmonodes, vel ab A.-S. Scizan, ascendere; quia sc. continuo crescit, nisi per medicamenta cohibeatur." He adds injudiciously—"vel a Gr. \(\Sigma\tau\alpha\), lapillus, propter duritiem, ut auguratur Mer. Cas."—The name of this complaint in the Anglo-Saxon is reizend or reizand, ascendens, rising up; the present participle of the verb reizan. Our ancestors therefore wanted not, and were not likely to borrow from the Greeks the name of a malady so common amongst themselves.

STY for hogs, in the Anglo-Saxon raize, is the past participle of raizen. It denotes a Raised pen for those filthy animals, who even with that advantage can scarcely be kept in tolerable cleanliness. The Italian Stia is the same word; of which Menage was aware; though he knew not its meaning.—" E vocabol Gottico. Steyra dicono gli Suezzesi per significare stalla da porci; et Hogstie, gli Inghilesi." Which makes it the more extraordinary, that, with his good understanding, Skinner should imagine that it might be derived—" a stipando; quia sc. in eo quasi stipantur."

A stile, in Anglo-Saxon reizel, the diminutive of Sty.

STIRRUP, in Anglo-Saxon reiz-pap. In the derivation of this word our etymologists (with the exception of Minshew) could not avoid concurrence. It is a mounting-rope; a rope by which to mount.

["The STIRRUP was called so in scorne, as it were a STAY to get up, being derived of the old English word STY, which is to get up, or mounte."

PAIN—We need not have recourse to Pana and Hown. It is the past participle of our own Anglo-Saxon verb Pınan, cruciare.

RAIN—In the Anglo-Saxon Ræzn, is the past participle of KIPNGAN, pluere. As the Latin Pluvia is the unsuspected past participle formed from Pluvi, the antient past tense of Pluere.

Chaucer uses the same word in the same meaning, writing it STREEN and STRENE.

Douglas, instead of the past tense as a participle, uses the past participle with the participial termination ED; STRYNED, STRYND.

"My fader than revoluing in his mynd
The discent of fore faderis of our STRYND."

Douglas, booke 3. pag. 70.

"My son Pallas, this young lusty syre

Douglas, booke 8. pag. 260.

"But an an hypa hpylc beapn hæbbe. ponne if me leogage pæt hit gange on pæt STRYNED on på pæpned healge."—Alfred's Will.

There is nothing extraordinary in this use of the participle STRAIN or STRYND as a substantive. The past participle GET, i. e. Begotten, is used in the same manner.

- "And I thy blude, thy GET, and dochter schene."

 Douglas, booke 10. pag. 313.

By every squadron, her alluring eyes;
To edge her champions' swords, and urge my ruin."

Don Sebastian, act 2. sc. 1.]

YESTER-day is in the Anglo-Saxon Leggnan degas. Leggnan is the past tense and past participle of Leggnan, To Acquire, To Get, To Obtain. But a day is not gotten or obtained, till it is passed: therefore zeggnan dæz is equivalent to the passed day. Leggnan, Yestran, Yester.

The Latin Etymologists and Menage, with whom Junius and Skinner concur, would persuade us that HESTERN-us is derived from the concur, would persuade us that HESTERN-us is derived from the concur, would some of them from Hæreo—"nempe quia dies hesternus hæret hodierno." But this reason would suit as well the subsequent as the preceding day: and therefore the term, leaving no distinction between them, would not be qualified for the office assigned to it. The Latin HESTERN-us is also of our Northern origin: Ghestern, Hestern.

BRUISE—according to the constant practice of the language, by the change of the characteristic letter, is the past tense and past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Bnyran, conterere; according to our antient English, To Brise. [French, Briser.]

Historie of Prince Arthur, 2d part. chap. 83.

TRUCE—is formed in the usual manner. It is the regular past tense and therefore past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Thippian, fidem dare, To pledge one's Faith, To plight one's Troth. The French Trêve (formerly written Tresves) is the same word.

Malone says—"The word BRUIT is found in Bullokar's English Expositor, 8vo, 1616, and is defined—'A reporte speead abroad."

Upon this note, Malone sagaciously remarks—"I believe Dr. Johnson is mistaken. TIRING means here, I think, Fixed, Fastened; as the hawk fastens its beak eagerly on its prey."!]

^{* [}Upon this passage Dr. Johnson says—"A hawk, I think, is said to TIRE, when she amuses herself with pecking a pheasant's wing, or any thing that puts her in mind of prey. To TIRE upon a thing, is therefore, to be idly employed upon it."!

"——This man

If all our fire were out, would fetch down new Out of the hand of Jove, and rivet him To Caucasus, should he but frown; and let His own gaunt eagle fly at him to TIRE."

B. Jonson. Catiline, act 3.

Turd and dung may therefore be well applied to the same thing; although each word has intrinsically a very different meaning: for turd, i. e. that which has been fed upon, been eaten, must, by the course of nature, be afterwards Dejectum from the body; and thereby becomes dung.

"Sum man hadde a fige tree plauntid in his vyner, and he cam sekinge fruyt in it, and fonde not. sotheli he seide to the tilier of the vyner, lo thre yeris ben, sithen I come sekynge fruyt in this litil fyge tree: and I fynde not. therfor kitte it down, wherto occupieth it the erthe. Philippensys, chap. 3. ver. 8.

Muck These two words are improperly confounded Mixen by Junius and Skinner. They do not mean the same thing.

Muck is the past tense and therefore past participle of Miczan, meiere, mingere, To Piss. And it means (any thing, something) pissed upon. Hence the common saying—"As wet as Muck," i. e. As wet as if pissed upon. So the hay and straw, &c. which have been staled on by the cattle, make the MUCK heap, or heap of materials which have been staled upon by the cattle.

MIXEN means the same as Mixed, and is equivalent to Compost.—" Quia est (as Skinner truly says) miscela omnium alimentorum."

"The operation of the stomake is, to make a good MYXYON of thynges there in, and to digeste them well."

Regiment of Helth. By Tho. Paynel, fol. 48. pag. 1.

What we call a MIXEN was indifferently termed in the Anglo-Saxon either Meox or Mixen: that is, they either (in their accustomed manner) used the regular past tense as a past participle; or they added the participial termination en to the verb, and so obtained a past participle. Our English verb To Mix is no other than the Anglo-Saxon verb Mircan, miscere. By casting off the Anglo-Saxon infinitive termination and, and, according to our custom, prefixing our infinitive sign To, we had the verb To Misc. And this, by a transposition common to all people and languages, became To Mics, i. e. To Mix. Meocr or Meox is the past tense of Mircan or Micran, used participially: and Mircen, Micren, or Mixen is the past participle.

I cannot help noticing to you as we pass (though I have often forborne a similar remark) that the Latin verbs Miscere and Meiere, for which Junius and Vossius would send us in vain to the Hebrew, are evidently from our own Northern language; with no other difference than the Latin infinitive termination ERE instead of the Anglo-Saxon infinitive termination AN.

You have touched upon this subject before. And what you threw out has not been lost upon me. I do spy great relief to the difficulties of the Latin etymologist, by directing his view to the North rather than to the East, when all his labour and toil are frustrate in the Greek. And I agree with you, that, dismissing the common terminations, which are mere common adjuncts to the different words, it is impossible not to discover at once the derivation of many of them.

Besides those Latin words you have already noticed; the following, are plainly of Northern origin: and the Latin etymologist struggles in vain to discover any other source.

But, in my opinion, the most decisive fact in your favour, is, that we find in the Latin (as Nouns) many of our past participles; which cannot receive any rational explanation in the Latin or Greek languages; because they have either not adopted the verbs to which those participles belong; or did not from those verbs form their past participles in the Anglo-Saxon manner. I mean, for instance, such words as,

[Gaudi-um	——Бе-еабід-ап.]
Nod-us	Knot, of Enittan, nectere.
Stult-us	—— of Styltan, obstupescere.
Long-us	——Long, of Lengian, extendere.
Fæd-us	——Fæzeb, of Fæzan, pangere.
Jug-um	——Ioc. Yoke, of Ican, jungere.
Dir-us	——Dear, of Dipian, nocere.
Spoli-um	Spoil, of Spillan, privare.
Laus	Blior, of Bliran, celebrare.
Hestern-us	Yester, of Lertpinan, acquirere.

Di-es	Dæz, of Dæzian, illucescere.
Ocul-us	——ληΓΩ, of ληΓλΝ, ostendere.
&c.	&c.

Of all which words the serious and elaborate accounts given by the Latin etymologists, will cause to those who consult them, either great disgust or great entertainment, according to the disposition and humour of the inquirer.

But I beg pardon for this interruption, which your-self however occasioned: We shall have time enough hereafter to canvass this matter: and I intreat you at present to proceed in your course.

Loos, though now and long since obsolete, was formerly in common use in the language: and your mention of the Latin word Laus has brought it to my recollection.

- "It is a carefull knight, and of kaytife kynges making,
 That hath no land ne linage riche ne good LOOs of hys handes."

 Vision of P. Ploughman, fol. 57. pag. 2.
 - "And felle, that Ariadne tho,
 Whiche was the doughter of Minos,
 And had herde the worthye LOS
 Of Theseus." Gower, lib. 5. fol. 112. pag. 2. col. 1.
 - "Great LOOS hath largesse, and great prise
 For both wyse folke and unwyse."

 Rom. of the Rose, fol. 125. pag. 2. col. 1.
 - "She knewe by the folke that in his shippes be,
 That it was Iason ful of renomee,
 And Hercules, that had the great LOOS."

 Hypsiphile, fol. 214. pag. 1. col. 2.
 - "Ye shal haue a shrewde name
 And wicked LOOS, and worse fame,
 Thoughe ye good LOOS haue wel deserued."

 3d Boke of Fame, fol. 300. pag. 1. col. 1.
 - " And yet ye shal haue better LOOS Ryght in dispyte of al your foos."

Ibid.

- "And he gan blowe her LOOS so clere
 In hys golden clarioun,
 Through the worlde went the soun."

 Ibid. col. 2.
- "In heuen to bene LOSED with God hath none ende."

 Testament of Loue, boke 1. fol. 310. pag. 2. col. 2.
- "Sir priest, he said, I kepe for to haue no LOOS
 Of my crafte, for I wold it were kept cloos,
 And as you loue me, kepith it secre."

 Tale of Chanons Yeman, fol. 63. pag. 1. col. 2.

["That much he feared least reproachfull blame
With foule dishonour him mote blot therefore;
Besides the losse of so much LOOS and fame,
As through the world thereby should glorifie his name."

Faerie Queene, book 6. cant. 12. st. 12.]

This word was also antiently in common use with the French. Menage endeavoured to revive it. He says—"Ce mot étoit un beau mot. Ie souhaiterois fort qu'on le rémît en usage: et pour cela, j'ai dit dans mon épître à M. Pelisson:

" Fais-tu raisonner le LOS De Fouquet, ton grand héros."

Loos or los is evidently the past participle of the verb Dliran, celebrare *. As laus also is. Of which had the Latin etymologists been aware; they never would, by such childish allusions, have endeavoured to derive it, From $\Lambda \alpha o c$, populus—"ut laus proprie sit sermo populi de virtute alicujus testantis."

"Vel a Aaw, id est, eloquor."

Vel ab antiquo Λανω, id est, fruor.—" Quia nullus virtutis major est fructus, quam Laus."

Busy, i. e. Occupatus, is the past participle of Byrzian, occupare.

STUNT, i. e. Stopped in the growth: the past participle of Stintan, To Stop †.

"She fel, as she that was throug NOME Of loue, and so forth ouercome."

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 103. pag. 1. col. 2.

"He maie neither go ne come,
But all to gether he is BENOME
The power both of honde and fete."

Ibid. lib. 6. fol. 127. pag. 2. col. 1.

- [" Or hath the crampe thy ioynts BENOMD with ache."

 Spenser. Shepheards Calender. August.]
 - " If this law
 Of nature be corrupted through affection,
 And that great mindes, of partiall indulgence
 To their BENUMMED wills, resist the same,
 There is a law in each well orderd nation
 To curbe those raging appetites." Troylus and Cressida.
 - "Bedlam beggars, who with roaring voices
 Strike in their NUM'D and mortified armes Pins, &c."

 Lear, pag. 293.
- "These feet whose strengthlesse stay is NUMME."

 1st Part of Henry 6. pag. 104.

["It was such bitter weather that the foote had waded allmost to the middle in snow as they came, and were so NUMMED with cold, when they came into the towne, that they were faine to be rubbed to get life in them."—Life of Col. Hutchinson, pag. 181.]

Num is the past tense and past participle of Niman, fort. quia stulti, præseroces sunt: vel a verbo To Stand, ut Resty, a restando; metaphora ab equis contunacibus sumpta." Lye says—"STUNT, alicujus rei incrementum impedire: maniseste venit ab Isl. Stunta, abbreviare; in decursu, sensu aliquantulum mutato."

capere, eripere, To Nim. Skinner says truly—" Eodem fere sensu quo Lat. dicitur membris captus, i. e. membrorum usu, sc. motu et sensu privatus."

Numscull, in Ital. Mentecatto, Animo captus.

So Seneca. Hercules Furens.

"Ut possit animo captus Alcides agi, Magno furore percitus; vobis prius Insaniendum est."

Hurt—The past participle of Dyppian, injuria afficere, vexare.

Hunger—The past participle of Dynznian, esurire.

DINT DINT The past participle of Dynan, strepere, To Din.

DUN

"They hurled together and brake their speares and all to sheuered them, that all the castle rang of their DINTS."

Hist. of Prince Arthur, chap. 132.

A DUN is one who has DINNED another for money or any thing.

SNAKE, Anglo-Saxon Snac, is the past par-SNAIL sticiple of Snican, serpere, repere, To Creep, Snug To Sneak; as Serpens in Latin is the present participle of Serpere.

Shakespear very properly gives this name to a sneak-ing or creeping fellow.

"I see Loue hath made thee a tame SNAKE."

As you like it, act 4. sc. 3. pag. 202.

Snail, rnæzel (or Snakel) the diminutive of snake:

G being sounded and written instead of K in the Anglo-Saxon; and both G and K dropped in the English.

SNUG (i.e. Snuc) is likewise the past participle of Snucan; the characteristic 1 changed to u, and G sounded for K.

SMUT—is the past participle of Smitan, be-jmitan, polluere, inquinare, contaminare*.

CRUM—Mica, is the past participle of Enymman, acpymman, friare.

"The ryche man shal gyue answere of euery threde in his clothe, of euery CROMME of brede in his bredeskep, of euery droppe of drynke of his barell and in his Tonne."

Dives and Pauper, 8th comm. cap. 17.

["Then art thou in a state of life which philosophers commend. A CRUM for thy supper, a hand for thy cup."

Campaspe (by John Lily) act 1. sc. 2.]

"As the gold-finer will not out of the dust, threds, or shreds of gold, let pass the least CRUM; in respect of the excellency of the metall; so ought not the learned reader to let pass any syllable of this law, in respect of the excellency of the matter."

Lord Coke's Exposit. of 29th chap. of Magna Charta.

Gun—formerly written gon, is the past participle of Lynian, hiare.

"They dradde none assaut
Of gynne, GONNE, nor skaffaut."

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 140. pag. 1. col. 1.

Scum—That which is Skimmed off; the past participle of the verb To Skim. Hence the Italian Schiuma and the French Escume, Ecume.

SNUFF—That which is Sniffed up the nose; the past participle of the verb To Sniff.

Pump—An engine by which water, or any other fluid is obtained or procured. It is the past participle of the verb To Pimp, i. e. To procure, or obtain.

STENCH—is the past participle of Stincan, feetere; pronouncing ch for k. As Wench is the past participle of Pincan; Drench of Dpincan; and Wrench of Ppingan.

SNACK—Something Snatched, taken hastily, K for CH; it is the past participle of the verb To Snatch.

DITCH The past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb DYCHE DICIAN, fodere, To Dig. As the Latin reputed substantive Fossa is the past participle Crinitia. L'Eritreo, a Rimis: 'quod ejus frons rugis arata sit.' Sono da cercare altre derivazioni di questa voce. Grimace per Smorfia, diciamo in Francia."

La Crusca says—"GRIMO: aggiunto che diamo a vecchio grinzo, senex rugosus."

of fodere. In these words Dig, Dike, Dyche, Ditch, we see at one view how easily and almost indifferently we pronounce the same word either with G, K, or CH.

"I DYKE and delue and do that truth hoteth,
Some tyme I sowe and some tyme I thresh."

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 6. fol. 29. pag. 1.

"These labourers, deluers and DYKERS ben ful poore."

Dives and Pauper, 1st comm. cap. 46.

"Two freres walkynge on a DYCHES brynke." Ibid. cap. 50.

DIM—The past participle of Dimnian, adimnian, obscurare. It was formerly in English written DIMN*.

- "Ye elues, by whose ayde I haue BEDYMN'D
 The noone tide sun."
 Tempest, pag. 16.
- "With sad unhelpeful teares, and with DIMN'D eyes."

 2d Part of Henry VI. pag. 132.

TRIM—used adjectively or substantively, is the past participle of the verb Tpyman, ordinare, disponere.

"Young ladies, sir, are long and curious In putting on their TRIMS."

B. and Fletcher. Women Pleas'd.

"In gallant TRIM the gilded vessel goes."

Gray.

LIMB In Anglo-Saxon written Lim† and Limb; B LIMBO being written for P. It is the past participle

^{*} Junius derives this word from "Δειμασθαι, quod Hesychio exp. φοβεισθαι, metuere; quandoquidem naturalis tenebrarum metus est."

Skinner, from "Teut. Demmen, Dammen, obturare; quia omnia obturata propter luminis exclusionem tenebricosa sunt."

Lye from "C. B. et Arm. Du, vel Dy; caliginosus, ater, niger." S. Johnson,—from "Dow, Erse."

[†] Junius says—" LIM, fortasse per inversionem factum e tribus initialibus literis Græci μελος, membrum."

of the Anglo-Saxon verb Limpian, pertinere. And it means—quod pertinet or quod pertinuit. What belongeth or hath belonged to something. Limb of the body. Limb of the law. Limb of an argument, &c. Hence and hence only are derived the Latin words Limbus and Lembus*: which are sometimes translated sqi-orquia, sqi-orquia: but that is not precisely the meaning, unless the notion of pertinendi, i. e. of holding to, or belonging to, is included.

[" He found himself unwist so ill bestad, That LIM he could not wag."

Faerie Queene, book 5. cant. 1. st. 22.

"And soothly sure she was full fayre of face, And perfectly well shapt in every LIM."

Ibid. book 6. cant. 9. st. 9.]

IMP—Shakespear, in Loues Labours Lost, pag. 125, makes Don Armado say,

"Sadnesse is one and the selfe same thing, dear IMPE."

Upon this passage Dr. Johnson says:—"IMP was antiently a term of dignity. Lord Cromwel in his last letter to Henry VIII. prays for the IMP his son. It is now used only in contempt or abhorrence; perhaps in our author's time it was ambiguous, in which state it suits well with this dialogue."

In the 2d part of Henry IV. pag. 99, we have IMP again,

"Saue thy grace, king Hall, my royall Hall.

The heauens thee guard and keepe, most royall IMPE of fame."

^{* &}quot;LIMBUS—Non occurrit nunc unde verisimilius deducam, quam a λοβος, quo τα ακρα παντα significari Hesychius et Suidas testantur."—Vossius.

And again in Henry V. pag. 83

"The king's a bawcock, and a heart of gold, a lad of life, an IMPE of fame, of parents good."

Mr. Steevens (very differently indeed from Dr. Johnson) sought industriously and judiciously for the meaning of Shakespear's words, by the use which was made of the same terms by other antient authors: and nothing was wanting to Mr. Steevens to make him a most perfect editor of Shakespear, but a knowledge of his own primitive language, the Anglo-Saxon. Mr. Steevens tells us,—"An imp is a Shoot, in its primitive sense, but means a Son in Shakespear. In Hollinshed, p. 951, the last words of Lord Cromwel are preserved, who says—'And after him that his sonne prince Edward, that goodlie impe, may long reigne over you."——And again, "The word imp is perpetually used by Ulpian Fulwell, and other antient writers, for progeny.

'And were it not thy royal IMPE Did mitigate our pain.—'

Here Fulwell addresses Anne Bulleyne, and speaks of the young Elizabeth. Again, in the Battle of Alcazar, 1594:

'Amurath, mighty emperor of the East,
That shall receive the IMP of royal race.—'

Impyyn is a Welch word, and primitively signifies a Sprout, a Sucker. In Newton's Herbal to the Bible, 8vo. 1587. there is a chapter—on shrubs, shootes, slippes, young imps, sprays, and buds."

Mr. Steevens needed not to have travelled to Wales, for that which he might have found at home. Our language has absolutely nothing from the Welch. IMP is the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Impan, To Plant, To Graft.

- "—— I was continually a fryer
 And the couentes gardiner for to graft IMPES
 On limitors and listers, lesynges I IMPED
 Tyll they beare leaues of smowthe speach."

 Vision of Pierce Ploughman, pass. 6. fol. 22. pag. 2.
- "IMPE on an elderne, and if thyne apple be swete Muchel maruaile me thynketh."

Ibid. pass. 10. fol. 44. pag. 1.

- "As it is in younge and tender YMPES, plantes, and twygges, the whiche euen as ye bowe them in theyr youthe, so wyll they euermore remayn."—Byrth of Mankynde, fol. 54. pag. 2.
 - ["And also for the love which thou doest beare

GRIP—and its diminutive GRAPPLE, the past participle of Lippan, prehendere.

Mist—The past participle of Mirtian, caligare*.

And according to Junius—" Videtur esse a μειστον, quod Hesychio exp. ελαχιστον, nihil enim aliud est nebula, quam tenuissima quædam ac subtilissima pluvia."

^{*} Minshew derives MIST from the Latin Mistus. "Aer enim caligine et densis vaporibus Mistus."

Dr. Th. Hickes supposes it to be Moist.

BLISS The past participle of Bliffian and Bliffian, BLITH Slætari.

Quick—The past participle of Epiccian, vivificare.

Wizen—The past participle of Pirnian, arescere.

Stiff-The past participle of Stiffian, rigere.

THICKET
THICKET
Thicket
Condensare.

THICKET, for Thicked, i. e. with trees. THIGH (GH for CK) is sometimes in the Anglo-Saxon written Deoh (for Deoc) by change of the characteristic letter.

WITCH Skinner inclines to suppose WICKED de-WICKED rived from Vitiatus: and Johnson, that—"Perhaps it is a compound of Pic (vile, bad) and Head,—Malum caput."—

According to which latter wise supposition, a wicked action means—a malum caput action: but nothing is too ridiculous for this Undertaker. Witch is the past tense, used as a participle, of the Anglo-Saxon verb Piccian, incantare, veneficiis uti. And wicked i. e. witched (k for ch) is the same past tense, with the participial termination ed. The word witch is therefore as applicable, to men as to women.

"WITCHES, in foretime named Lot-tellers, now commonly called sorcerers." Catalogue of English printed Bookes. 1595.

By Andrew Maunsell, pag. 122.

Lot-teller; i. e. a teller of covered or hidden things.

"Wherof came the name of Symonye? Of Symon Magus, a grete WYTCHE."—Dives and Pauper, 7th comm. cap. 16.

"Dauid was lyk wyce so intanglid in the snares of the deuill, that with mouche paine he could quit hym self from the WYCCHYD coupe that the deuill had one brought hym."

Declaracion of Christe. By Johan Hoper, cap. xi.

The notions of enchantment, sorcery and witchcraft were universally prevalent with our ancestors, who attributed all atrocious actions to this source: thus attempting to cover the depravity of human nature by its weakness, and the depravity of some other imaginary beings. So run our indictments to this day; in which the crime is attributed to the instigation of the Devil.

"Latini certe, comici," says Junius, "hominem aperte improbum atque omnibus invisum, pari prorsus ratione, dixerunt Veneficum."

HILDING—(like Coward) is either the past participle of the verb Dylban, inclinare, curvare, To Bend down, To Crouch or To Cower; (and then it should be written HILDEN) or it is the present participle Dylbing (Dylband) of the same verb.

- ["Which when that squire beheld, he to them stept," Thinking to take them from that HYLDING hound."

 Faerie Queene, book 6. cant. 5. st. 25.]
- "A base slaue, a HILDING for a liuorie, a squires cloth, a pantler."—Cymbeline, pag. 378.
 - "Tis positive against all exceptions, Lords,
 That our superfluous lacquies, and our pesants,
 Who in unnecessarie action swarme
 About our squares of battaile, were enow
 To purge this field of such a HILDING foe."

 Henry V. pag. 86.
 - "He was some HIELDING fellow, that had stolne
 The horse he rode on." and Part Henry IV. pag. 75.

"Nay, good my lord, put him too't; let him have his way. If your lordshippe finde him not a HILDING, hold me no more in your respect. Beleeue it, my lord, in mine owne direct knowledge, he is a most notable coward."

All's Well that Ends Well, pag. 243.

Some have supposed HILDING to mean Hinderling (if ever there was such an English word) and some Hilderling; which, Spelman says, is familiar in Devonshire. It is true that Dyloen is a term of reproach in the Anglo-Saxon, furnished by this same verb, and means—a croucher or cowerer*.

RIPE—the past participle of Ripian, maturescere.

RHIME—of Dpiman, numerare.

Spoil-of Spillan, privare, consumere.

CRISP—In the Anglo-Saxon Eippr, of Eipprian, crispare, torquere.

DEED (like Actum and Factum) means—something, any thing—done. It is the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Don, To Do. Do-Ed, did, deed, is the same word differently spelled. It was formerly written dede, both for the past tense and past participle.

- " I do nought as Ulysses DEDE."

 Gower, lib. 1. fol. 10. pag. 2. col. 2.
- "Fy, upon a lorde that woll haue no mercy
 But be a lyon, bothe in worde and DEDE."

 Knightes Tale, fol. 5. pag. 2. col. 1.

^{*} S. Johnson, in a note, act. 2. sc. 1. Taming of a Shrew, tells us that HILDING means—"a low wretch." But in his Dictionary he has discovered that bild in the Anglo-Saxon means a Lord: and that "perhaps Hilding means originally a little Lord, in contempt for a man that has only the delicacy or bad qualities of high rank."

NEED | Nýbbe, the past tense and past participle of Needle | Nýbian, cogere, compellere, adigere*.

NEEDLE, (the diminutive of NEED) a small instrument, pushed, driven.

Observe, as we pass, that To Knead is merely Le-nyban (Lnyban) pronounced Lneban—к for G.

DEEP DEEP (which some derive from $\beta \upsilon \theta \upsilon \varsigma$, fun-Dab-chick dum; primis tribus literis inversis: and others from $\Delta \upsilon \pi \tau \omega$) is merely the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Dippan, mergere, To Dip, To Dive.

"DEAPE linen clothes in to sundry waters, and after lay them to dry, and that whiche is sonest dry, the water wherin it was DEAPED, is most subtyl."—Castel of Helth. fol. 31. pag. 2.

"A spunge DEAPED in cold water."—Ibid. fol. 34. pag. 1.

In DAB-chick or DOB-chick; DAB or DOB, (so pronounced for Dap or Dop) is also the past participle of Dippan; by the accustomed change of the characteristic I to A or O.

"So was he dight
That no man might
Hym for a frere deny,
He DOPPED and dooked
He spake and looked
So religiously."

Sir T. More's Workes, fol. 11. pag. 1.

Junius, from voodw, vottw.

And NEEDLE, Mer. Cas. would derive from βελονη.

^{*} Minshew derives NEED from the Hebrew Nadach, impulit. Mer. Casaubon, from the Greek evdena, penuria.

"This officere
This fayned frere
Whan he was come aloft,
He DOPPED than
And grete this man
Religiously and oft."

Sir T. More's Workes, fol. 11. pag. 1.

"The diving DOB-chick, here amongst the rest you see,
Now up, now down, that hard it is to proue,
Whether under water most it liveth, or above."

Poly-olbion, song 25.

WEAK—The past participle of Pican, labare, To Totter, To Fail.

HELP—The past participle of Dylpan, adjuvare: which Minshew derives from Ελπις; and Junius from "συλλαβων, sibilo tantummodo in aspiratam commutato."

Well—Is the past participle of Pillan, ebullire, effluere, To Spring out, To Well.

It means (any or some place) where water, or other fluid, hath sprung out, or welled.

- "And than WELLED water for wicked workes Egrely Ernynge out of mens eyen."

 Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 20. fol. 109. pag. 2.
- "Where as the Poo, out of a WEL small Taketh his first spring and his sours."

 Clerke of Oxenf. Prol. fol. 45. pag. 1. col. 2.
- "For which might she no lenger restrayne
 Her teares, they gan so up to WELL."

 Troylus, boke 4. fol. 186. pag. 1. col. 1.

Welkin Wheel Winter's Tale, act 1. sc. 1. pag. 278. While While

" Come (Sir Page)
Looke on me with your WELKIN eye."

On which passage S. Johnson says hardily, as usual; "welkin eye: Blue eye; an eye of the same colour with the WELKIN or sky."

And this is accepted and repeated by Malone. I can only say, that this Note is worthy of them both; and they of each other.

Welkin is the present participle Pillizeno, or Pealcyno (i. e. volvens, quod volvit) of the Anglo-Saxon verb Pillizan, Pealcan, volvere, revolvere. Which is equally applicable to an eye of any colour—to what revolves or rolls over our heads—and to the waves of the sea. Pealcynoe ea. pealcenoe ræ.

A rolling or wandering eye is no uncommon epithet:

" Come hither, pretty maid, with the black and rolling eye."

Here is a black Pealcyno or WELKIN eye: and indeed the WELKIN, or that which is rolled about over our heads is sometimes black enough*.

But Messrs. Johnson and Malone probably agree with Mr. Tyrwhitt, who, in the advertisement to his Glossary,

On which Mr. Todd gives the following note:

"The WHILK or WELK is a shell-fish. Perhaps the poet introduced this adjective in the sense of wreathed, twisted, as that shell-fish appears. Or perhaps it may be considered in the sense of WHELKED, that is, rounded, or embossed; from WHELK, a protuberance, according to Fluetlen's description of Bardolph's

^{[* &}quot;As gentle shepheard in sweete eventide, page iiii. says—" Etymology is clearly not a necessary branch of the duty of a Glossarist!"

WHEEL, quod volvitur, In Anglo-Saxon Dpeozl, Dpeohl, Dpeopol, (by transposition, for Peoliz or Peolz) is also the past participle of Pillizan.

- "Haile to thee, Ladie: and the grace of heauen,

WHILE—In the Anglo-Saxon Dpile (for Dpiol) is the same past participle. We say indifferently—Walk a While—or—Take a Turn.

["And commonly he would not heare them WHILEST an hundred suters should come at once."—R. Ascham, pag. 19.]

CHAP CHEAP The past participle of Lypan, mercari, To CHEAP Traffick, To Bargain, To Buy or Sell.

A CHAP or CHAPMAN.—Any one who has trafficked.

WRETCH Phac, Phec. The past participle of VKIKAN, Phican, persequi, affliwretched gere, punire, vindicare, ulcisci, lædere, perdere. The different pronunciation of the or ck (common throughout the language) is the only difference in these words. They have all one meaning. And though, by the modern fashion, they are now differently applied and differently written; the same distinction was not antiently made.

SMEAR—The past participle of Smynian, ungere, illinere.

SHEEN—The past participle of Scinan, splendere, fulgere.

HEARSE The past participle of Dyprtan, ornare, pha HURST Serare, decorare*. HEARSE is at present only applied to an ornamented carriage for a corpse.

"So many torches, so many tapers, so many black gownes, so many mery mourners laughyng under black hodes, and a gay HERS."—Sir T. More. De Quatuor Novissimis, pag. 79.

["But leave these relicks of his living might

Hurst is applied only to places ornamented by trees.

Where many a goodly oak had carefully been nurst,
The sylvans in their songs their mirthful meeting tell."

Poly-olbion, song 2.

WILE Menage says—"GUILLE. C'est un vieux Guille mot françois, qui signifie tromperie. Les Guill Anglois disent encore à present gile et Gull will, pour tromperie. Il est difficile de savoir s'ils ont emprunté ce mot de nous, ou si nous le te-

[•] Minshew derives HEARSE from "Greek, apois, i. e. a lifting up: for the Hearse is a monument or emptie tombe erected or set up for the honourable memorie of the dead."

Junius says—" Medii ævi scriptt. dicebatur Hersia, quod vulgo fortasse ita dictum ab A.-S. Ane, honor; vel Denian, laudare: quod in laudem honoremque defuncti erigatur."

Skinner—" Nescio an a Teut. Hulse, siliqua: est enim cadaveris quasi exterior siliqua. Hoc Hulse, credo ortum ab A.-S. belan, tegere, q.d. tegumentum."

nons d'eux." It is easily settled between them. Neither has borrowed this word from the other. They both hold it in common from their common Northern ancestors: though Mer. Casaubon would derive it from the Greek aloks. In the Anglo-Saxon, Pizlian, Le-pizlian, Bepizlian, means to conjure, to divine, consequently to practice cheat, imposture and enchantment.

WILE (from Pizhan) and GUILE (from Le-pizhan) is that by which any one is deceived.

Guilt is Ge-pizled, Guiled, Guil'd, Guilt: the past participle of Ge-pizlian. And to find guilt in any one, is to find that he has been Guiled, or, as we now say, Be-guiled: as Wicked means Witched, or Be-witched. To pronounce guilt is indeed to pronounce Wicked.

GULL is the past tense (formed in the usual manner, by the change of the characteristic letter) and means merely a person Guiled or Beguiled.

At this day, we make a wide distinction between GULL, the past tense, and GUILT, the past participle; because our modern notions of enchantment, sorcery, and witch-craft are very different from the notions of those from whom we received the words. Gull therefore is used by us for Guiled or Beguiled (subaud. aliquem) without any allusion to witchcraft. But GUILT, being a technical Law-term, keeps its place in our legal proceedings, as the instigation of the Devil does; and with the same meaning.

^{*} These words have exceedingly distressed our English Etymologists.—GUILTY, Minshew says, "a Belg. Gelden, i.e. luere, solvere: ut Reus—Res enim Reorum petitur in judicio."

Junius-"Eyloan est reddere, solvere. Atque ita zyleiz vel giltie

F.

You seem to have confined yourself almost entirely to instances of the change of the characteristic letters I and v. And in those you have abounded to satiety. But we know that the verbs with other characteristic letters change in the same manner. Have not they also furnished the language with concealed participles, supposed to be substantives and adjectives.

FOOD In Anglo-Saxon poo, pæt, are the past parti-FAT Sciple of the verb Fedan, pascere, To Feed.

proprie dicetur, qui culpam commissam tenetur solvere vel ære vel in corpore."

Skinner—" A verbo Lilban, solvere. Et hoc prorsus ex moribus priscorum Germanorum; qui quævis crimina, imo homicidium, et, quod vix credideris, etiam regum suorum cædem, mulctis pecuniariis expiabant."

GULL—Mer. Casaubon derives, by a most far-fetched allusion, from γυλιος, pera militaris. Junius and Skinner repeat this; and have no other derivation to offer; except that Junius says—" Mihi tamen Angl. GULL non ita longe videtur abire a Scot. Culze: morari blando sermone, palpandoque demulcere."

" Now him withhaldis the Phinitiane Dido And culzeis him with slekit wordis sle."

Douglas, booke 1. pag. 34.

 To gif thaym souck, can thaym culze bayth."

 Ibid. booke 8. pag. 266.
- "The cur or maists he haldis at smale analyle,

MILK One and the same word differently pro-MILCH I nounced (either CH or K), is the past participle of the verb Welcan, mulgere.

MEAT—In Anglo-Saxon Mæt (whatever is Eaten) is the past participle of the verb MATGAN, Metian, edere, To Eat.

Mess—Is the past participle of Metrian, cibare, To furnish meat or food. In French Mets; in Italian Messo; from the same verb.

SCRAP—Is the past participle of Scheopan, scalpere, radere, To Scrape. It means (any thing, something) scraped off.

Offal—The past participle of Feallan, Areallan; as Skinner explains it—"quod decidit a mensa."

ORT—This word is commonly used in the plural; only because it is usually spoken of many vile things together. Shakespear, with excellent propriety for his different purposes, uses it both in the singular and plural.

"Where should he haue this gold? It is some poor fragment, some slender ORT of his remainder."—Timon of Athens, pag. 94.

"The fractions of her faith, ORTS of her loue,
The fragments, Scraps, the Bits, and greazie Reliques
Of her ore-eaten faith, are bound to Diomed."

Troylus and Cressida, pag. 102.

Where you may observe Orts, Scraps, Bits, Reliques, all participles.

Skinner says—"ORTS, parum deflexo sensu, a Teut. Ort, quadrans seu quarta pars: fort. olim quævis pars, seu portio."—Which derivation omits entirely the meaning of the word: for ORT is not applicable to every part or portion of a thing.

Lye says—"Vox est, agro Devoniensi, usitatissima: unde suspicabar per plerosque Angliæ comitatus diffusam fuisse; et ex ought (aliquid) corruptam, quod iis effertur ort, gh in r pro more suo, mutato. At aliter sentire cæpi, cum incidissem in Hib. orda, fragmentum. Quod ut verum etymon non potui non amplecti."

This groundless derivation of Mr. Lye, which explains just nothing at all, and leaves us where we were, is by Johnson pronounced most reasonable: yet every fragment is not an ORT.

ORTS is, throughout all England, one of the most common words in our language; which has adopted nothing from the Irish, though we use two or three of their words, as Irish. ORTS is merely the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Operran, turpare, vilefacere, deturpare. ORET, ORT means (any thing, something) made vile or worthless.

HEAT In Anglo-Saxon Dæt, Dat, i.e. Heated; is the Hot I past participle of the verb Dætan, calefacere. Hot, as a participle, is sufficiently common: Heat is rarely so used. Ben Jonson however so uses it in Sejanus, act 3.

"And fury ever boils more high and strong, HEAT with ambition, than revenge of wrong."

WARM—Pæpm, Peapm, and Pýpmeo, i. e. Warmed, are the past tense and past participle of the verb Pýpman, calefacere.

What is LUKE-WARM or LEW-WARM? For I find it is spoken and written both ways. How does it differ from wARM?

"The beryes of iuniper or galbanum beaten to powder and dronke with LUKE WARMED wyne."

- "Ye maye use in the stede of wyne, LUKE WARME mylke."

 Ibid. fol. 38. pag. 2.

 - "Quhare the vyle fleure euer LEW WARME was spred With recent slauchter of the blude newlie schede."

 Douglas, booke S. pag. 247.

 Ibid. pag. 243.

H.

LUKE WARM The Anglo-Saxon Plæc, tepidus (which Lew WARM we corruptly pronounce and write LUKE) is the past participle of Placian, tepere, tepescere. And Lew, in the Anglo-Saxon Dlip and Dleop, is the past participle of Dlipan, Dleopan, tepere, fovere. Nor need we travel with Skinner to the Greek $\lambda\nu\omega$; "quia tepor humores resolvit et cutim aperit:" nor with Junius to $\chi\lambda\nu\alpha$ -goç from $\chi\lambda\nu\alpha\nu\omega$.

To say LUKE OF LEW WARM is merely saying WARM-WARM. And that it is a modern pleonasm, the following passage in the third chapter of the Apocalyps will, I think, convince you. In the modern Version it stands:—

"I know thy works, that thou art neither cold nor hot: I would thou wert cold or hot. So then, because thou art LUKE-WARM, and neither cold nor hot, I will spue thee out of my mouth."

In the old Version, which is called Wickliffe's, it is thus given:—

"I woot thy werkis, for nether thou art cold nether thou art hote. I wolde thou were cold or hoot, but for thou art LEW, and nether cold nether hoot, I shal bigynne for to caste the out of my mouth."

In the Version of Edward the sixth, it runs thus:—

"I know thy workes, that thou art nether colde nor hotte: I wolde thou were colde or hote. So then, because thou arte BETWENE BOTH, and nether cold nor hote, I wyll spewe thee out of my mouth."

Plough (A.-S. plog and plou.) Is the past participle of Plezzan, incumbere.

"No man sendinge his hond to the PLOUG, and biholdinge agen, is able to the rewine of God."—Luke, cap. ix. ver. 62.

Our English verb To Ply, is no other than plezzan.

"Preoft ne beo hunta. ne harecepe. ne tærlepe. ac plezze (incumbat) on hir bocum."—Canones sub Edgaro, R. 64.

Cool Cold In Loues Labours Lost, pag. 144. Shakespear uses the word To Keele.

"Then nightly sings the staring owle
To-whit, to-who.
A merie note,
While greasie Ione doth KEELE the pot."

On this passage Dr. Farmer tells us-"To Keele the pot, is, to cool; but in a particular manner: It is—To stir the pottage with the ladle, to prevent the boiling over."

Mr. Steevens too thinks that Keele means cooling, in a particular manner. But his manner differs from Dr. Farmer's.—He says—" Mr. Lambe observes, in his notes on the ancient metrical history of the battle of Flodden, that it is a common thing in the North, for a maid servant to take out of a boiling pot a wheen i. e. a small quantity, viz. a porringer or two of broth, and then to fill up the pot with cold water. The broth thus taken out is called the Keeling wheen. In this manner greasy loan Keeled the pot."

That Mr. Malone should repeat all this, is nothing wonderful; it is perfectly to his taste. But it is really lamentable, that two such intelligent men as Dr. Farmer and Mr. Steevens should expose themselves thus egregiously. Who, or what, informed them, that To Keek meant To stir with a ladle, or, To take out a porringer or two?

There are very numerous instances of the use of the word To Keel, without the least allusion to ladles or porringers.

"Sende Lazarus, that he dippe the laste part of his fynger in watir and KELE my tunge."—Luke, cap. 16. ver. 24.

"To the louers Ouide wrote,
And taught, if loue be to hote,
In what maner it shulde AKELE."

Gower, lib. 4. fol. 77. pag. 2. col. 2.

In the Castel of Helth, by Syr Thomas Elyot, book 3. fol. 73. He says—"Onyons, lekes, fynally all thynges whyche heateth to moche, KELETH to moch, or drieth to moche." And Malone himself knew, that in Marston's What you will, was the following passage,——"Faith, Doricus, thy braine boyles; Keel it, Keel it, or all the fat's i' the fire."

So in the Vision of Pierce Ploughman,

- "Vesture, from CHEYLE to saue." Pass. 2. fol. 4. pag. 2.
- "And the carfull may crye and carpen at the gate

 Both a hungerd and a furste, and for CHELS quake."

 Pass. 11. fol. 46. pag. 1.
- "Bothe hungry and a CALE." Pass. 19. fol. 103. pag. 1.
- "And syth they chosen CHELE and cheitif pouertie Let them chewe as they chosen."

Pass. 21. fol. 115. pag. 1.

"Do almesse for them, and by almes dede, by masses syngynge, and holy prayers, refresshe them in theyr paynes, and KELE the fyre about theym."—Dines and Pauper, 9th comm. cap. 11.

"To KELE somehat theyr hygh courage."

Fabian, parte 5. chap. 140.

In the above instances can there be any employment for the ladle or porringer?

In truth, the verb To Keel, i. e. The Anglo-Saxon Eelan, refrigerare, is a general term; confined to and signifying no particular manner. And of this verb Eelan; CHILL (A.-S. Eele) and COOL (A.-S. Eol) are the past tense: and Eoleo, Eol'o, COLD (A.-S. Eealo) is the past participle.

NESH Minshew derives NICE from the Latin Nitidus:
NICE Junius from the French Niais. It is merely the Anglo-Saxon Dueyc, differently pronounced and written; and is the past participle of Dueycian, mollire.

"Mine herte for joye doth bete
Him to beholde, so is he godely freshe,
It semeth for love his herte is tendre and NESSHE."

Court of Love, in Urry's Edition of Chaucer.

"So that no step of hym was sene in the NESSHE fenne or more that he passed thorough."—Fabian, parte 6. chap. 172.

SLEET—Is the past participle rle-ed, rleed, rleet; of rlean, projicere. And has no connexion (as Johnson imagined) with the Danish Slet, which means smooth, polished.

"—— Flying, behind them, shot
Sharp SLEET of arrowy show'rs against the face
Of their pursuers." Paradise Regained, book 3. ver. 324.

HOAR—Anglo-Sax. Dap, is the past tense and past participle of Dapian, canescere.

"They toke HORED brede in theyr scryppes, and soure wyne in theyr botels, and loded asses with olde HORED brede in olde sackes."—Dives and Pauper, 2d comm. cap. 20.

ADDLE Though Mer. Casaubon and Junius would send us for AIL, to αλυων, mærore affici, or IDLE to αλγων dolere; and for IDLE, to υθλος, nugæ; and for ILL, to the Greek ιλλος, strabo; or even to the Hebrew; I am persuaded that these are only one word, differently pronounced and written: and that it is the past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Aiolian, ægrotare, exinanire, irritum facere, corrumpere.

"If you loue an ADDLE egge, as well as you loue an IDLE head, you would eate chickens i' th' shell."—Troylus and Cressida.

ADDLE pated, and ADDLE brained, are common expressions.

"You said that IDLE weeds are fast in growth."

Richard 3d. pag. 186.

"ILL weids waxes weil."—Ray's Scottish Proverbs, pag. 295.

ADDLE becomes AIL, as IDLE becomes ILL by sliding over the D in pronunciation.

DAM The past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Dæ-Dumb man, Demman, obturare, obstruere, To Dam.

"Now will I DAM up this thy yawning mouth
For swallowing the treasure of the realm."

2d Part Henry 6. pag. 137. col. 2.

As we have already seen that Barren means Barred; and that Blind means Blinned or Stopped; so DUMB means obturatum, obstructum, Dammed. And therefore, when those who have been DUMB recover their speech, their mouths are said to be opened; the DAM being, as it were, removed.

Though these three words, Barren, Blind, and Dumb, are now by custom, confined to their present respective application; i. e. to the womb, the eyes, and the mouth; they were originally general terms, and generally applicable; as all the other branches of those verbs, To Bar, To Blin, and To Dam, still are: and, having all one common meaning, viz. Obstruction, if custom had so pleased, they might, in their application, very fairly have changed places.

So when B. Jonson, in his Poetaster, act 1. sc. 2. says, —"Nay, this 'tis to have your ears Dam'd up to good counsell."—He might have said—"This 'tis to have DUMB ears; or, ears Dumb to good counsell."

In A	Antony and	Cleopatra,	pag. 344.	Shakespear writes
"	" So he nodded,
	And soberly	did mount a	an arme-gau	nt steede,
VOI	11		7

Who neigh'd so hye, that what I would have spoke, Was beastly DUMBE by him."

Mr. Theobald here alters the text, and instead of DUMBE, reads DUMB'D. This reading Mr. Malone approves, adopts, and calls a correction. But there needs here no alteration. DUMBE is the past tense of Dæman, Demman, and means Dammed, i. e. Obstructed, or stopped.—"What I would have spoke, was, in a beastly manner, obstructed by him."

Dumb was formerly written Dome and Dum; without the B.

"He became so confuse he cunneth not loke,
And as DOME as death."

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 11. fol. 47. pag. 2.

"I tell you that which you yourselues do know,
Shew you sweet Cæsar's wounds, poor poor DUM mouths,
And bid them speake for me." Julius Cæsar, pag. 122. col. 2.

And Junius, whose authority may be much better relied on than his judgement, tells us, and bids us remark it—"Quod in Cantabrigiensis publicæ bibliothecæ codice mso melioris notæ, Matth. 12. 22. Luc. 1. 22. bum scribitur."

Dull Dull (or as it is in the Anglo-Saxon, col)
Dult hebes; is derived by Mer. Casaubon from δουλος, servus. "Notissima (says he) est Aristotelis opinio, δουλους esse a natura, qui scilicet κοινωνουσι του λογου τοσουτον, όσον αισθανεσθαι, αλλα μη εχειν: quos etiam ad corporis ministeria natos a bestiis usu μικέον παξαλλαττιν sancit."

Skinner would derive DULL from Dollan, pati, sustinere, tolerare;—"Qui enim obtusi sensus sunt, injurias et quaslibet vexationes æquiore animo patiuntur." But DULL, bol, is the regular past tense of opelian, opolan, hebere, hebetare. And DOLT, i. e. Dulled (or bol-eb, bol'b, bol'c) is the past participle of the same verb.

"Oh gull, oh DOLT, as ignorant as durt."

Othello, pag. 337.

Though the verb, To Dull, is now out of fashion, it was formerly in good use.

" I DULLE under your disciplyne."

Rom. of the Rose, fol. 143. pag. 1. col. 1.

"For though the best harpour on lyue Wold on the best sowned ioly harpe That euer was, with al his fyngers fyue Touche aye o strynge, or aye o warble harpe, Were his nayles poynted neuer so sharpe, It shulde make euery wight To DULLE."

Troylus, boke 2. fol. 168. pag. 1. col. 2.

"For elde, that in my spirite DULLETH me, Hath of endyting al the subtelte Welnigh berafte out of my remembraunce."

Complaynt of Venus, fol. 344. pag. 1. col. 2.

"Myrth and gladnesse conforteth men in Goddes seruyce, and beuynesse DULLETH and letteth all maner lykinges."

Dives and Pauper, 3d comm. cap. 18,

"Her syght sholde haue be derked, and her herynge sholde haue PULLED more and more."

B. Jonson. Magnetick Lady, act. 1. sc. 7.

"—— Cunning calamity,
That others gross wits uses to refine,
When I most need it, DULS the edge of mine."

Beaumont and Fletcher. Honest Man's Fortune.

["Sir Martin. There's five shillings for thee: What, we must encourage good wits sometimes.

Warner. Hang your white pelf: Sure, sir, by your largess, you mistake me for Martin Parker, the ballad-maker; your covetousness has offended my muse, and quite DULL'D her."

Sir Martin Mar-all: by Dryden, act 5. sc. 1.]

GRUB (ГКЯВ) The past tense and therefore past participle of ГКАВАN, fodere.

GRUDGE, written by Chaucer GRUTCHE, GRUCHE, and in some copies GROCHE.

- "A lytel yre in his herte ylafte

 He gan to GRUTCHEN and blamen it a lyte."

 Reues Prol. fol. 15. pag. 1. col. 2.
- "At thende I had the best in eche degre
 By sleight or force, or by some maner thing,
 As by contynuall murmure or GRUTCHYNG."

 Wife of Bathes Prol. fol. 36. pag. 1. col. 1.
- "What ayleth you to GRUTCHE thus and grone?"

 1bid. col. 2.

"And sayne the Pope is not worth a pease
To make the people ayen him GRUCHE"—or GROCHE.

Ploughmans Tale, fol 99. pag. 1. col. 2.

Mer. Casaubon derives this word from yoyyuzu, murmuro.

Minshew, from the Latin grunnire.

Junius, from γευζειν, hiscere, mutire.

Skinner, from the French Gruger, briser. And Gruger from cruciari: "quia qui alicui invidet, aliena felicitate cruciatur."

S. Johnson will have it either from the French Gruger, or from the Welch Grugnach, or from the Scotch Grunigh, or—rather from Grudgeons!—"Grudgeons being (as he says) the part of corn that remains after the fine meal has passed the sieve."

A GRUDGE is the past participle of Dneopian (Le-hneopyan) Dneopyian, Le-hneopyian, dolere, ingemiscere, pænitere.

DRUDGE—(Dnooz, Dnuze) The past tense and past participle of Dneozan, Le-oneozan, agere, tolerare, pati, sufferre. Dneozeno, the present participle.

Sмоотн—(утав) The past participle of утевіап, polire, planare.

Junius derives this word from σμαω, σμω, σμω: and Skinner from μαδος.

MAD) is merely Mætt, Mæb (D for т), the past Matto) tense and past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Metan, somniare, To Mete, To Dream.

The verb, To Mete, was formerly in common use.

"I fell eftsones a slepe, and sodainly me METTE."

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 20. fol. 103. pag. 2.

- "And eke I sayd, I METTE of him all nyght
 And al was fals, I Dremed of him right naught."

 Wife of Bathes Prol. fol. 56. pag. 2. col. 2.
- "And whan that he in chambre was alone,
 He downe on his beddes fete him sette,
 And firste he gan to sike, and efte to grone,
 And thought aye on her so withouten lette,
 That as he satte and woke *, his spirite METE
 That he her saugh." Troylus, boke 1. fol. 159. pag. 1. col. 1.

"As he satte and woke, his spirite METE that he her saugh."—This I take to be a clear, though not a physiological, description of Madness.

This is not the place to enter into a physiological inquiry concerning the nature of madness and of dreaming; in order to shew the propriety of the name, as I have explained it. But I may give you a short extract from the ingenious observations on Insanity, by Mr. John Haslam. 1798.

"Some who have perfectly recovered from this disease, and who are persons of good understanding and liberal education, describe the state they were in, as resembling a Dream."

And our valuable friend Mr. Rogers, in his beautiful poem, The Pleasures of Memory, has this note:

Ibid. Zenobia, att. 2. sc. 1.]

[&]quot; [" Dubbio così s'aggira
Da un torbido riposo
Chi si destò talor:
Che desto ancor delira
Fra le sognate forme;
Che non sa ben se dorme,
Non sa se veglia ancor.
Metastasio. La Clemenza di Tito, att. 2. sc. 7.

[&]quot; — gli amanti Sognano ad occhi aperti."

"When sleep has suspended the organs of sense from their office, memory not only supplies the mind with images, but assists in their combination. And even in madness itself, when the soul is resigned over to the tyranny of a distempered imagination, she revives past perceptions, and awakens that train of thought which was formerly most familiar."

The Italian MATTO, is this same Anglo-Saxon participle. Wett, with the Italian terminating vowel. The decided opinion of Menage and Junius, that MATTO is derived from the Greek $\mu\alpha\tau\alpha\iota\sigma\varsigma$, is overruled in my mind, by the consideration of the time when the word MATTO was first introduced into the Italian language: for the Greek derivatives, in that language, proceed to it through the Latin. And in the Latin there is nothing which resembles MATTO.

Smuc*—is the past participle of Smæzan, meazan, deliberare, studere, considerare. Applied to the person or to dress, it means studied; that on which care and attention have been bestowed.

- "I will die brauely, like a SMUGGE bridegroom."

 Lear, pag. 304.
- "A beggar, that was us'd to come so SMUG upon the mart."

 Merchant of Venice, pag: 173.
- "A young SMUG, handsome holiness has no fellow."

 B. and Fletcher. The Pilgrim.

^{* &}quot;E literis vocis κοσμος fieri potuit σμοχος; atque inde Smuck. Sed Italis Smoccare est emungere: quasi Exmucare. Ita nimirum solent uti 8, tanquam præpositione inseparabili, ex Se Latino; quasi Semuccare, mucum separare. Sed tam multis non est opus: cum facillima derivatione peti possit ex σμαω, σμεω, σμω, σμηχω, abstergo, detergo."—Junius.

"Fie, Sir, so angry upon your wedding day!
Go, SMUG yourself, the maid will come anon."
B. and Fletcher. Women Pleas'd.

"Go in, and dress yourself SMUG, and leave the rest to me."

Wycherly. Love in a Wood, act. 4. sc. 1.

PROUD (Anglo-Saxon Pnut) The past participle of Pnytian, superbire.

SAFE—formerly written SAFFE; The past participle of the verb To Save.

"He hir wymple fonde blodie,
And wende a best had hir slayne,
Where as hym ought be right fayne,
For she was SAFFE right beside."

Gower, lib. 2. fol. 56. pag. 2. col. 1.

"Than his dyscyples sayd to Cryste. Lorde, who may than be SAVE."—Dives and Pauper. Of Holy Poverte, cap. 5.

Of this past tense (according to their common custom) our ancestors made the verb To Low: or To make Low.

"Fortune hath euer be muable,
And maie no while stonde stable,
For nowe it hieth, nowe it LOWETH."

Gower, lib. 8. fol. 177. pag. 1. col. 1.

"The god of Loue, ah benedicite,
Howe mighty and howe great a lorde is he.
For he can make of lowe hertes hye,
And of hye lowe.
He can make within a lytel stounde
Of sicke folke, hole, fresshe and sounde,
And of hole he can make seke.

Shortly al that ever he wol he may,
Agaynst hym dare no wyght say nay,
For he can glad and greue whom hym lyketh,
And who that he wol, he LOWETH or syketh."

Cuckowe and Nyghtyngale, fol. 350. pag. 2. col. 2.

- "The prayer of hym that LOWETH hym in his prayer, thyrleth the clowdes."—Diues and Pauper, 1st comm. cap. 15.
- "Whan he is waxen and roted in pryde and in mysuse of lyuynge, it is full harde to LOWE hym or to amende hym."

 Ibid. 4th comm. cap. 10.
- "They lyue forth in pryde and not LOWE them to God, ne pray to God for helpe."—Ibid. 5th comm. cap. 3.
- "For al this Adam repented hym not, ne wolde axe mercy, ne LOWE him."—Ibid. 6th comm. cap. 25.

Of this verb To Low, the past participle is indifferently either Low-en, Low'n, Lown; or Low-ed, Low'd, LowT, (T for D.)

"We should have both Lord and LOWN, if the pecuish baggage would but give way to customers."

Perioles Prince of Tyre, act 4. sc. 6.

"———— I have belyed a lady,
The princesse of this country, and the ayre on't
Revengingly enfeebles me, or could this carle,
A very drudge of natures, have subdu'de me
In my profession? Knighthoods and Honors (borne
As I weare mine) are titles but of scorne.
If that thy gentry (Britaine) go before
This LOWT, as he exceeds our lords, the oddes
Is, that we scarse are men, and you are goddes."

Cymbeline, pag. 392. col. 1.

You will observe that, of this participle LowT, we have again made another verb, viz. To Lowt, To do or to bear one's self as the Lowed person, i. e. the LowT, does.

SLACK SLOUCH SLUG SLow SLOVEN SLUT

(in the Anglo-Saxon rlæc, rleac, rloz, rlæp, rleap, rlap) are all the same past tense and SLOUGH therefore past participle (differently pronounced and written) of the Anglo-Saxon verb rleacian, rleaczian, rlacian (A broad) tardare, remittere, relaxare, pigréscere.

"The noblest of the Greekes that there were Upon her shulders caryed the bere With SLAKE pace." Knyghtes Tale, fol. 10. pag. 2. col. 2.

Slouch, rlæc—(cm for k) i. e. a slow (pace.)

Slough, ploz—(gh for ch) i.e. slow (water.)

Slug, rloz—(G for K) i. e. slow (reptile.)

SLow, rlap—(w for G.)

Such changes of pronunciation are perpetual and uniform throughout the whole language.

SLOW-EN, SLOUEN, SLOVEN; and SLOW-ED, SLOW'D, SLOUD, SLOUT, SLUT; are the past participles of the verb Slapian, To Slow, i. e. to make Slow, or cause to be Slow*. There is no reason, but the fashion, for the distinction which is at present made between sloven and slut, by applying the former of these words to males only, and the latter only to females: and we are sure that distinction did not prevail formerly: for Gower and Chaucer apply shur to males.

^{* [&}quot; Lookt on by ech the stately ladie goes, But lookes on none, and to the king she came, Nor, for he angry seemes, one steppe she $LOWES." Godfrey of Bulloigne. Translated by R. C. pag. 58. cant. 2. st. 19.

[&]quot; Mirata da ciascun passa, e non mira L'altera donna, e innanzi al re se'n viene. Nè, perche irato il veggia, il piè ritira."]

"Among these other of SLOUTES kinde
Which all labour set behinde,
And hateth all besines,
There is yet one, which Idelnes
Is cleped.
In wynter doth he nought for colde,
In somer maie he nought for hete;
So, whether that he frese or swete,
Or be he in, or be he out,
He woll ben ydell all about:
For he ne woll no trauaile take
To ride for his ladies sake."

Gower, lib. 3. fol. 69. pag. 1. col. 1.

"Why is thy lorde so SLOTLYCHE*, I the pray,
And is of power better clothes to bey?"

Prol. of Chanons Yeman, fol. 59. pag. 2. col. 2.

Lore—The past participle of Læpan, docere.

Home—The past participle of Dæman, coire.

Hone—(petrified wood) the past participle of Dænan, lapidescere.

[Gown—from Dynan, Le-hynan, humiliare, To bring down to the ground. Past participle Lehon, Lehun. N.B. Anglo-Saxon substantive Dyno, i. e. that which humbleth, or bringeth down to the ground.

^{*} Mr. Urry reads SLOTTISH; and Mr. Tyrwhitt, SLUTTISH.

LOAN—The past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb blænan, Lænan, To Lend, formerly written To Lene.

"Yf a man LENE awaye an other mannes good without assent of him." "In the LENYNGE he useth an other mannes good ayenst his wyl."—Dives and Pauper, 7th comm. cap. 8.

"Yf wynnynge come frely to the LENER for his LENYNGE without couenaunt."—"Yeue ye your LONE hopynge noo wynnynge."—"The usurer selleth togydre the thynge that he LENETH."

Ibid. cap. 24.

Foam—ræm; the past participle of Fæman, spumare*.

Fowl. As Bird, so Fowl, (A.-S. ruzel,) by a similar but not quite so easy and common a metathesis, is the past participle of Fliozan, riolzan, riozlan, volare.

SHOCK—The past participle of Scacan, To Shake.

"And after that himselfe he SHOKE Wherof that all the halle quoke."

Gower, lib. 6. fol. 139. pag. 1. col. 2.

"In the dyenge of Ihesu the erth groned and SHOKE."

Nycodemus Gospell, chap. 8.

Skinner thinks pæm is from the Latin Fumus. "Spuma enim rarescens instar fumi vel nebulæ est; certe proximum ei raritatis gradum obtinet."

^{* &}quot;FOME, quibusdam videtur dicta quasi Vome; quod sit quasi quidam vomitus aquæ violento motu concitatæ ac veluti ferventis. Ubi notandum quod Chaucero in Angl. translatione Boethianæ Consolationis, Vomes sunt spumæ. 'Setiger spumis humeros notavit.' 'The bristled Bore marked with Vomes the shulders of Hercules.'"—Junius.

- Whan I herde the commaundement of his worde, I trembled and SHOKE for drede."—Nycodemus Gospell, chap. 15.
- "The erthe SHOKE so and trembled that they Sonke downe in to helle."—Dives and Pauper, 6th comm. cap. 16.
 - "The sterry heuen me thought SHOKE with the shout."

 Skelton, pag. 57.

"The frere arose,
But I suppose
Amased was his hed,
He SHOKE his eares,
And from grete feares
He thought hym well a fled." Sir T. More's Workes.

Doom—The past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Deman, judicare, censere, decernere, To Deem.

"Whan I Deme DOMES, and do as trouth teacheth."

Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 16. fol. 77. pag. 1.

"Than sayd Pilate, Take hym in to your synagoge and DEME there on hym your lawe."—Nycodemus Gospell, chap. 3.

"God ruleth, DEMETH and gouerneth all mankynde &c.—whoos DOMES and ordenaunces passe mannes wytte."

Dives and Pauper, 1st comm. cap. 19.

"None of us can tel what deth we be DEMED to."

Sir T. More. De quatuor novissimis, pag. 84.

Roof-In the Anglo-Saxon Dnor, the past participle of Dnærnan, sustinere.

Minshew, Junius and Skinner derive it from the Greek

Woof are the past tense and past participle of West Speran, texere, obvolvere, tegere. To Weave.

PROOF The past tense and past participle of the Reproof Verb To Preve and To Repreve.

- Harry scruamt is bounden to wante his lords of the harme that is done to his lords in his office for good fayth and saluacyon of his owne persone &c. yf he can PREUE them he is bounde to telle them to his lords, yf his lord is pacyent and resonable and not to cruell, and yf he cannot PREUE them he is not bounde to telle them."—Dises and Pauper, 2d comm. cap. 13.

- "This sayand with richt hand has scho HYNT The hare, and cuttis in tua or that scho stynt."

 Ibid. pag. 124.

So HANDLE or Hand-del, is a small part taken hold of.

"He would gladly catche holde of some small HANDELL to kepe hys money fast, rather then help his frendes in their necessitie."—Sir T. More. Supplication of Soules, pag. 330.

FANG, the past tense and past participle of FINGER | Fengan, capere, prehendere.

.. FINGER, i. e. renzen, quod prehendit.

Speech—Any thing spoken, and the faculty by which any thing is spoken. The past tense and past participle prec, prece, of precan, To Speak. The indifferent pronunciation of CH or CK pervades the whole language.

FETCH, (A.-S. pæc) is the past tense and past participle of Feccan, fraude acquirere, adducere.

["Yet since so obstinate grew their desire,
On a new FETCH (t' accord them) he relide."

Godfrey of Bulloigne, cant. 5. st. 72.]

THACK (A.-S. Dac) is the past tense and past par-THATCH ticiple of Decan, tegere.

- "Thy turphic mountaines, where liue nibling sheepe,
 And flat medes THETCHD with stouer, them to kepe."

 Tempest, act 4. sc. 1. pag. 14.
- "A well built gentleman; but poorly THATCHT."

 B. and Fletcher. Wit without Money, act 1. sc. 1.

LACE LATCH
LUCK
CLUTCHES

LACE and LATCH are the past tense and past participle of Læccan, Læczan, Læccean, prehendere, apprehendere.

"A stronger than I shal come aftir me, of whom I, kneelinge, am not worthi to unbynde the LACE of hise shoon."

Mark, chap. 1.

- "There cometh one mightier than I after me, the LATCHET of whose shoes I am not worthy to stoop down and unloose."

 Ibid. ver. 7.
 - "His hatte Hinge at hys backe by a LACE."

 Prol. to Chanons Yeoman, fol. 59. pag. 1. col. 2.

- ["Therewith in haste his helmet gan UNLACE."

 Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 3. st. 37.
 - "There the fond flie, entangled, strugled long,
 Himselfe to free thereout; but all in vaine.
 For, striving more, the more in LACES strong
 Himselfe he tide, and wrapt his wingës twaine
 In lymie snares."

 Spenser's Muiopotmos, st. 54.]

The LATCH of a door, or that by which the door is caught, latched, or held, is often likewise called a catch.

- "If thou wilt be gracious to do good as the gospel techith,
 And biloue the among low men, so shalt thou LATCH grace."

 Vision of Pierce Ploughman, pass. 7. fol. 34. pag. 2.
- "As who so layeth lynes for to LATCHE foules."

 Ibid. fol. 26. pag. 1.
- "The same I say forsoth, by al such priestes,
 That have nether cunning ne kynne, but a crowne one,
 And a title a tale of nought, to live by at his mischife;
 He hath more believe, I leve, to LATCH through crown Cure than for kennynge." Ibid. pass. 12. fol. 57. pag. 2.
- "And whan the find and the flesh forth with the worlde Manacen behinde me my frute for to Fetche, Than liberum arbitrium LATCHETH the first polante."

 Ibid. pass. 17. fol. 87. pag. 2.
- "What shepe that is full of wulle
 Upon his backe thei tose and pulle
 Whyle ther is any thynge to pille. &c.
 Whiche is no good shepeherdes dede,
 And upon this also men sayn
 That fro the Lease, whiche is plaine,
 In to the breres thei forcatche,
 Here of for that thei wolden LACHE
 With suche duresse, and so bereue
 That shal upon the thornes leue
 Of wool, whiche the brere hath tore."

Gower. Prol. fol. 3. pag. 1.

"As Ouid in his boke recordeth
How Polyphemus whilom wrought,
When that he Galathe besought
Of loue, whiche he maie not LATCHE."

Gower, lib. 2. fol. 27. pag. 2. col. 2.

"Of love which he maie not LATCHE; i. e." says Skinner, "amoris quem dimittere non potest: amoris sc. inextinguibilis. a Fr. G. Lascher, laxare, remittere. Vir Rev. dictum putat pro Catch. Verum quoniam iste metaplasmus nusquam, quod sciam, in Germ. et recentioribus dialectis occurrit, mallem secundum etymon petere a Fr. G. Laisser, relinquere: i. e. Amor qui relinqui seu demitti nequit: vel a Teut. et Belg. Leschen, extinguere, delere: i. e. Amor, ut dictum est supra, inextinguibilis et indelebilis."

Skinner's mistake in the etymology of the word To Latch, caused his mistake in the meaning of the preceding lines; in which Gower does not speak of the love of Polyphemus; but of the love of Galathe, which he besought, and could not get, could not take hold of, could not Latch.

- "Loue wyl none other byrde catche,
 Though he set eyther nette or LATCHE."

 Rom. of the Rose, fol. 127. pag. 2. col. 2.
- "Thre other thynges that great solace Doth to hem that be in my LACE."

 Ibid. fol. 133. pag. 1. col. 2.
- "So are they caught in loues LACE."

 Ibid. fol. 144. pag. 1. col. 2.
- "Loue that hath the so faste Knytte and bounden in his LACE." Ibid. pag. 2. col. 2.

["Tho pumie stones I hastly hent,
And threw; but nought avayled:
From bough to bough he lepped light,
And oft the pumies LATCHED."

Spenser: Shepheards Calender. March.

- "Which when the kidde stouped downe to catch,
 He popt him in, and his basket did LATCH." Ibid. May.]
- "——I have words
 That would be howl'd out in the desert ayre,
 Where hearing should not LATCH them."

 Macbeth, act 4. sc. 3. pag. 147.

Junius, concurring with Minshew says—"LATCH, magnam videtur habere affinitatem cum B. Letse vel Litse, nexus, laqueolus, quo aliquid continetur ne excidat. M. Casaubonus Angl. Latch per metathesin profluxisse putat ex ayxuluor."

Skinner and Lye concur that it is—"satis manifeste a Lat. Laqueus."

"LAQUEUS Nunnesio placet esse a $\lambda \nu \gamma o \epsilon$, id est, vitex, salix; ut mutetur v in A. Malim a Lax, quod fraudem notat, Festo teste. Vel ab Hebræo."—G. I. Vossius.

Isaac Vossius dissents from his father, and says it is—"omnino a κλοιος."——I am persuaded that the Latin Laqueus itself (as well as the Italian Laccio) is this same past participle Lacc or Lacz of Læccean, Læczan.

Luck is derived by Minshew, "a λαχος. i. Sors, fortuna." By Junius—"a B. Geluck, quod valde affine est Græco γλυκυ, dulce; quod nihil mortalibus videatur suavius, quam negotia sua bene feliciterque administrare." "Aliter de vocabuli etymologia M. Casaubon, 'λαγχανω, sortior, sortito obtineo. Το λαχον, quod sorte obtigit. Inde Luck et Luckie. Quamquam dubito utrum ex eadem sint origine, et non potius Luckie sit ex λευκος, candidus, albus."

But Luck (good or bad) is merely the same participle, and means (something, any thing) caught. Instead of saying that a person has had good Luck, it is not uncommon to say,—he has had a good catch.

CLUTCH is also the past participle of Le-læccean, capere, arripere.

- "Is this a dagger which I see before me,
 The handle toward my hand? Come, let me CLUTCH thee."

 Macbeth, act 2. sc. 1. pag. 136. col. 1.
- "But age with his stealing steps Hath caught me in his CLUTCH."

 Hamlet, pag. 277.

So CLUTCHES, i. e. Clutchers (Gelatchers): as Fangs and Fingers from Fenzan, and Hand from Dentan. Though Junius would persuade us that they are—"Hamatæ atque aduncæ ferarum volucrumque prædatricum ungulæ: a B. Klutsen, quatere, concutere: item Kletsen, gravi ac resono ictu percutere."

- ["But all in vaine: his woman was too wise Ever to come into his CLOUCH againe."

 Faerie Queene, book 3. cant. 10. st. 20.
- "And in his hand an huge long staffe he held,
 Whose top was arm'd with many an yron hooke,
 Fit to catch hold of all that he could weld,
 Or in the compasse of his CLOUCHES tooke."

 Ibid. book 5. cant. 9. st. 11.]

HANK
HAUNCH
HINGE
One and the same word, only with a different final pronunciation, common throughout the language, either of K, CH, or GE.

Minshew derives HAUNCH from ayrulos. Junius from ayrun; "quod non modo cubitum, sed quemlibet flexum significat:" Skinner from ayrun: Menage, the Italian Anca, from ayrun: S. Johnson says—"HINGE or Hingle from Hangle or Hang."—I believe no one ever before saw or heard of Hingle and Hangle. All the three words however are merely the past participle of the verb Danzan, pendere, To Hang.

To have a HANK upon any one, is, to have a hold upon him; or to have something Hank, Hankyd, Hanged or Hung upon him.

The HAUNCH, the part by which the lower limbs are Hankyd or Hanged upon the body or trunk. Hence also the French Hanche, and the Italian and Spanish Anca.

HINGE—That upon which the door is Hung, Heng, Hyng, or Hynge; the verb being thus differently pronounced and written.

"He HANKYD not the picture of his body upon the crosse to teache them his deathe."

Declaracion of Christe. By Iohan Hoper, cap. 5.

- "The same body that HANKYD upon the crose." Ibid. cap. 8.
 - "And therwithal he HYNG adowne hys heed And fel on knees." Troylus, boke 3. fol. 178. pag. 1. col. 2.
- "Than Gesmas the these whiche HENGE on the leste syde of our Lorde sayd thus to our Lorde Ihesu. If thou be God, delyuer bothe the and us. Than Dysmas that HENGE on the ryght syde of our Lorde Ihesu blamed hym for his wordes."

Nycodemus Gospell, chap. 7.

WAKE are one and the same word, differently pro-WATCH nounced and therefore differently written. Though accounted substantives in construction, they are merely the past participle of the verb Pecan, Peccean; vigilare, excitare, suscitare, expergisci, solicitare.

In the old translation of the New Testament attributed to Wicliffe, we read,

"Aboute the fourthe WAKING of the nigt."

In the modern translation,

"About the fourth WATCH of the night."

Mark, chap. 6. ver. 48.

- "And comaundide the porter that he WAKE. Therefore WAKE ye, forsothe ye witen not whanne the lorde of the hous shall come."
- "And commanded the porter to WATCH. WATCH ye therefore, for ye know not when the master of the house cometh."

 Ibid. chap. 13. ver. 34, 35.
- "And he cam and fonde hem slepinge, and he seide to Petir, Symount, slepist thou, migtest thou not WAKE oon hour with me? WAKE ye, and preie ye, that ye entre not in to temptacion."
- "And he cometh and findeth them sleeping, and saith unto Peter, Simon, sleepest thou? Couldest not thou WATCH one hour? WATCH ye and pray, lest ye enter into temptation."

Ibid. chap. 14. ver. 37, 38.

- "And if he shall come in the secounde WAKING, and if he shall come in the thridde WAKING, and shall fynde so, the seruauntist ben blessid. Forsothe wite ye this thing, for yf an husbande man wiste in what hour the theef shulde come, sotheli he shulde WAKE and not suffre his hous to be mynyd."
- "And if he shall come in the second WATCH, or come in the third WATCH, and find them so, blessed are those servants. And this know, that if the good man of the house had known what hour the thief would come, he would have WATCHED, and not have suffered his house to be broken through."

Luke, chap. 12. ver. 38, 39.

- "The constable of the castell that kepith al the WACHE."

 Vision of P. Ploughman, pass. 10. fol. 42. pag. 1.
- "Ne how that Arcite is brent to ashen colde,

 The WAKE playes, kepe I nat to say."

Knyghtes Tale, fol. 11. pag. 1.

"Al be it so, that no tonge may it deuise,
Though that I might a thousande winter tell
The paynes of that cursed house of hell;
But for to kepe us from that cursed place,
WAKE, and prayeth Iesu of his grace."

Freres Tale, fol. 42. pag. 1.

"They nolde drinke in no maner wyse
No drinke, that dronke might hem make;
But there in abstynence pray and WAKE,
Lest that they deyden." Sompners Tale, fol. 43.

"Saynt Poule byddeth us WAKE in all manner besynesse of gode werkes."—Dives and Pauper, 10th comm. cap. 6.

AWAKE is the same past participle of Pecan, preceded by A; the usual Anglo-Saxon prefix to the past tense.

Hence too, I believe, the old Italian words Avaccio and Avacciare; which have so exceedingly distressed their etymologists. The Italians not having a w, and pronouncing c as we pronounce cH, have made Avaccio from Apæc, or Awatch; which appears to me to be its meaning in all the passages where Avaccio is employed*.

F.

Though it is not much to our present purpose, I cannot but notice a word in our own language, as little understood by us. I mean the common nautical term AVAST; which seems to supply the place of our antient Yare, Yare. Skinner says, it means—"Ocyus facesse, hinc te proripe, abi quam primum; vox nautis usitatissima: fort. a præp. Lat. Ab et Belg. Haesten, festinare; q. d. Hinc festines." This is given by Skinner only as a conjecture; but it is not a happy one: for this Latin and Dutch mixture makes but an ill-assorted English compound. Apothecaries often complain of the physician's want of skill in pharmacy. S. Johnson, without even a glimpse of the meaning of the word, says—"AVAST, adv. [from Basta, Ital. It is enough] Enough. Cease."

H.

Skinner and Johnson differing thus widely in the import of the word, as well as in its derivation, I may be permitted to differ from both, and to offer my conjecture. Avast, when used by seamen, always precedes some orders or some conversation. It cannot therefore mean Abi quam primum. Hinc te proripe: neither can it mean Cease. Enough. Avast answers the same purpose as—Hearkye, List, Attend, Take heed, Cala, Hola, or (as the French used to begin the exercise of their soldiers) Alerte. Like the Italian Avacci, I think it means—Be attentive, Be on the Watch, i. e Awake. I do not undertake to shew the gradations of the corruption.

^{[*} Qu. Bivouac, Be-wachten?—ED.]

PSHAW

Of these words S. Johnson says,

"PACK—pack, Dutch."

"PACK—pack, Dutch."

"PATCH—pezzo, Italian."

"PAGE—page, French."

This Dutch, this Italian, and this French derivation (which explain nothing; and in point of signification leave us just where we were without them) he takes from Skinner. He then proceeds upon his own bottom.

"PAGEANT. Of this word the etymologists give us no satisfactory account. It may perhaps be Payen Geant, a Pagan Giant; a representation of triumph used at return from holy wars;—as we have yet the Saracen's head."

Undoubtedly we have in London the sign of the Saracen's head. Undoubtedly Payen is French, and Geant is French: but these words—Un Payen Geant—were never yet seen so coupled in French. He proceeds,

- "PATCHERY, Botchery, Bungling work, Forgery. A word not in use."
 - " PAGEANTRY, Pomp. Show."
- "PISH, interj. A contemptuous exclamation. This is sometimes spoken and written PSHAW. I know not their etymology, and imagine them formed by Chance."

His Chance is not half so disgusting as his Payen Geant: and it would have been better for his readers; would have saved him a little trouble; and been no disgrace to his philosophy; if he had at once assigned Chance as the common cause of all the words in the language.

The word PATCH however having been formerly applied to men, and PATCHERY to their conduct; and these applications of those words being no longer in common use; the commentators of Shakespear (in whose writings they are frequent) were compelled to inquire into the meaning of the words PATCH and PATCHERY.

"What a py'de ninnie's this. Thou scuruy PATCH."

Tempest, pag. 12. col. 1.

Mr. Steevens says—" It should be remembered that Trinculo is no sailor, but a Jester, and is so called in the ancient Dramatis Personæ. He therefore wears the party-coloured dress of one of these characters."

Mr. Malone says—" Dr. Johnson observes that Caliban could have no knowledge of the striped coat usually worn by fools; and would therefore transfer this speech to Stephano. But though Caliban might not know this circumstance, Shakespear did. Surely he who has given to all countries and all ages the manners of his own, might forget himself here, as well as in other places."

- " S. Dro. Mome, malthorse, capon, coxcombe, idiot, PATCH."
- " E. Dro. What PATCH is made our porter?"

 Comedy of Errors, pag. 90. col. 1.
- Mr. Steevens says—"PATCH, i. e. A fool. Alluding to the parti-coloured coats worn by the licens'd fools or jesters of the age."
 - "A crew of PATCHES, rude mechanicals,
 That worke for bread upon Athenian stals."

 Midsummer Nights Dreame, pag. 151. col. 1.

What were the Commentators to do here? These were not licenced Jesters, in parti-coloured coats; a crew of Jesters: but rude mechanicals, working for bread upon their stalls.

Johnson says—"PATCH was in old language used as a term of opprobry; perhaps with much the same import as we use ragamuffin or tatterdemalion*."

T. Warton—"This common opprobrious term probably took its rise from PATCH, Cardinal Wolsey's fool. In the Western Counties, Cross-patch is still used for perverse, ill-natured fool."

Steevens—"The name was rather taken from the patch'd or pyed coats worn by the fools or jesters of those times."

Tyrwhitt—"I should suppose PATCH to be merely a corruption of the Italian Pazzo, which signifies properly a Fool. So, in the Merchant of Venice, Shylock says of Launcelot—The PATCH is kind enough—after having just called him—That fool of Hagar's offspring."

Malone—"This term should seem to have come into use from the name of a celebrated fool. This I learn from Wilson's Art of Rhetorique—'A word-making, called of the Grecians onomatopeia, is when we make words of our own mind, such as be derived from the nature of ^{*} These explanatory words are themselves thus explained by Johnson:

[&]quot;Ragamuffin—from Rag, and I know not what else."

[&]quot;Tatterdemalion—Tatter, and I know not what."

things; as to call one PATCHE* or COWLSON, whom we see to do a thing foolishly: because these two in their time were notable fools.'—Probably the dress which the celebrated PATCHE wore, was, in allusion to his name, patched or parti-coloured. Hence the stage fool has ever since been exhibited in a motley coat. PATCHE, of whom Wilson speaks, was Cardinal Wolsey's fool."

" Serv. There is ten thousand— Macb. Geese? villaine.

Serv. Souldiers, sir."

" Macb. What souldiers? PATCH."

"What souldiers? Whey-face." Macbeth, pag. 42.

Steevens again says—"An appellation of contempt, alluding to the py'd, patch'd or parti-coloured coats antiently worn by the fools belonging to noble families."

Johnson, Steevens, Warton, and Malone assume, for the purpose of their explanation, that Patched means the same as pyed or particoloured. But this assumption every huswife can contradict.

In the following passages of Shakespear can they find any pying or particolouring?

" And oftentimes, excusing of a fault Doth make the fault the worse by the excuse: As PATCHES, set upon a little breach, Discredite more in biding of the fault, Than did the fault before it was so patch'd."

King John, pag. 14. col. 2.

^{* [}In two books in the Remembrancer's office in the Exchequer, containing an account of the daily expenses of King Henry the 7th, are the following articles, &c.

[&]quot;Item, to Pachye the Fole for a rew 0 . 6 . 8." See Malone's Edition of Shakespeare, vol. 1. part 2. pag. 53.]

They who put patches on a little breach, to hide it, are careful that the colour shall as nearly as possible resemble that upon which they put it.

- "Other diuels that suggest by treasons,
 Do botch and bungle up damnation,
 With PATCHES, colours, and with formes being fetch't
 From glistering semblances of piety." Henry V. pag. 75. col. 1.
- "Here is such Patcherie, such jugling and such knauerie: all the argument is a cuckold and a whore."

Troylus and Cressida, pag. 87.

"Tim. There's neuer a one of you but trusts a knaue,
That mightily deceives you.

Poet & Painter. Do we, my lord?

Tim. I, and you heare him cogge, see him dissemble,
Know his grosse PATCHERY, loue him, feede him,
Keepe in your bosome, yet remaine assur'd
That he's a made-up villaine."

Timon of Athens, pag. 96. col. 1.

But beside the words PATCH and PATCHERY, Shake-spear applies the word PACK* in a manner now almost obsolete.

"—What hath bin seene
Either in snuffes, and PACKINGS of the dukes,
Or the hard reine which both of them hath borne Against the old kinde king."

Lear, pag. 296. col. 1.

Upon this passage Mr. Steevens says—"PACKINGS

^{* [&}quot;Sought to nousel the common people in ignorance, least, being once acquainted with the truth of things, they would in time smell out the untruth of their PACKED pelfe and Masse-peny religion."—E. K.'s Glosse on Shepheards Calender: June.

[&]quot;These were the arts, with which she could surprize A thousand thousand soules by theeuish trade, Rather the armes with which, in robbing wise, To force of loue them humble slaues she made; are underhand contrivances. So, in Stanyhurst's Virgil, 1582.—'With two gods PACKING, one woman silly to cozen.'—We still talk of PACKING juries."

"——She, Eros, has
PACKT cards with Cæsars, and false plaid my glory
Unto an enemies triumph."

Antony and Cleopatra, pag. 362. col. 1.

To these instances from Shakespear we may add some others, written before Shakespear's time; one in the reign of Henry the seventh, before Wolsey was a Cardinal, or had a fool.

What maruaile then if fierce Achilles lyes,
Or Hercules or Theseus, to blade

- "King Rycharde did preferre such byshops to bishoprykes, as could neyther teache nor preache, nor knewe any thinge of the Scripture of God, but onely to call for theyr tythes and duties, and to helpe to serue his lustes and pleasures; whiche in dede were not worthye the name of byshops, but rather of noughtye PACKES disguised in byshoppes apparell."—Fabian, vol. 2. pag. 343.

"I tell you nothing nowe of many a noughtye PACKE, many a flecke and his make, that maketh their ymages metinges at these holsum hallowes."—Sir T. Mores Workes. A Dialogue, &c. pag. 140.

Now, if you have well considered the use and signification of the words PACK, PATCH and PATCHERY in the above different passages; I think I shall not surprize you, when I affirm that PACK, PATCH (in both its applications, viz. to men or to clothes) and PAGE, are the same past participle PAC (differently pronounced and therefore differently written, with K, CH, or GE) of the Anglo-Saxon verb Pæcan, Pæccean*, To deceive by false appearances, imitation, resemblance, semblance, or representation; To Todd supposes POUKE to be the true reading, i. e. PUCK, or Robin Goodfellow. I suppose the same; and that it belongs to this word Pæcan or Pæccean. His tricks account for his name.

Spenser: sonnet 54.]

The ejaculations PISH and PSHAW are the Anglo-Saxon Pæc, Pæca; pronounced PESH, PESHA (A broad). And are equivalent to the ejaculation—Trumpery! i. e. Tromperie from Tromper.

As servants were contemptuously called Harlot, Varlet, Valet and Knave, so were they called Pack, Patch and Page. And from the same source is the French PAGE and the Italian PAGGIO.

But if you shall be pleased rather to suppose that the English word PAGE comes from the French, and the French from the Italian, because that is the order in which you learned those languages: What will you gain by such a supposition? You must still go on, and inquire the meaning of PAGGIO. And all the satisfaction you will obtain, will be; that some will tell you, it comes either from the Latin Pædagium, or from Fabeus, or from the Greek aux*, or from the Turkish Peik, or from the Persian Bagoas. But still you will have made no progress: for the meaning of any one of these words (distinct from its application) they will not attempt to tell you.

F.

If the office of PAGE was an inferior station, your etymology would have more probability; but you know there is much dispute upon that subject; and that many contend, it was a post of honour and distinction, unlikely to receive so degrading an appellation.

H.

A page of honour, comparatively with other pages, was no doubt in a post of honour. But of the grandeur of the station you may judge by what follows.

"Sir knight, I pray thee to tell me what thou art, and of thy being. I am no knight, said Sir Gawaine, I haue been brought up many yeares in the gard-robe, with the noble prince king Arthur for to take heede to his armour and his other aray, and for to point his paultockes that belongeth to him selfe. At Christmas last hee made me Yeoman, and gaue me horse and harneis and an hundred pound in money, and if fortune be my friend, I doubt not but to be well advanced and holpen by my liege lord. Ah, said Priamus, if his Knaves be so keene and fierce, then his knights be passing good. Now for the kinges loue of heauen, whether you be knight or knaue, tell me thy name. By god, said Sir Gawaine, now will I tel the truth; my name is Sir Gawaine, and knowen I am in his noble court and in his chamber, and on of the knights of the round table: he dubbed me a duke with his own hande, therefore grudge not if his grace is to me fortune and common, it is the goodnesse of God that lent to me my strength. Now am I better pleased, said Priamus, then if thou hadst given me all the prouince of Paris the rich, I had rather to be torne with wild horses then any Varlet should have wonne such lots, or any PAGE or Pricker should have had the price of me."

Hist. of Prince Arthur, chap. 97.

"Our lyege lorde the kyng hath power and fredom, of a PAGE for to make a Yoman, of a Yoman a Gentylman, of a Gentylman a Knight, of a poore man a grete Lord, without leue or helps of the planetes."—Dives and Pauper, 1st comm. cap. 17.

WRIST The past participle of the verb Prærtan, WRIST Storquere, intorquere, To Wrest.

"It causeth hertes no lenger to debate
That parted ben with the WRESTE of hate."

Lyfe of our Lady, pag. 176.

WRIST, which is the same participle, was formerly called Danopynyt, i. e. Handwrist, or Handwrest.

- ["Their shining shieldes about their WRESTES they tye."

 Faerie Queene, book 1. cant. 5. st. 6.
 - "His sunbroad shield about his WREST he bond."

 Ibid. book 2. cant. 1. st. 21.
 - "His puissant armes about his noble brest,
 And many-folded shield he bound about his WREST."

 Ibid. cant 3. st. 1.
 - "And Guyons shield about his WREST he bond."

 [bid. cant. 8. st. 22.]

GRIST—(Le-piped) the past participle of Le-pipan, Le-hpyran, contundere, conterere, collidere, To Crush. To Crush comes from the same verb. As does also the French Escraser, Ecraser. hKISGAN, FA-hKISGAN, DS-FA-hKISGAN.

FRAME The past participle of Freman, facere.

The Latin Forma, by a common transposition, is likewise from the same verb: But if this derivation should not please you, see whether you will be better off with the Latin etymologists.

"Forma ab antiquo Formus, id est, calidus; quia ex calore nativo provenit. Nonnullis placet, ut καλον juxta Platonem venit απο τε καλων, id est, vocare; quia pulcra hominem ad se alliciunt: ita Formam esse ab όρμη; quia impetu quodam homines ad Formæ amorem impellantur. Sane spiritus asper crebro abit in F. Atque idem locum habeat, si Forma deducatur ab όραμα, quod ab όραω, video. Et sane hoc prioribus impensius placuit.  Ibid. book 6. cant. 8. st. 48.]
- "I have methinks a kind of fever upon me: a certain GLOOMI-NESS within me, doubting, as it were, betwixt two passions." B. and Fletcher: The Woman Hater.
 - "The field, all iron, cast a GLEAMING brown."

 Paradise Regained, book 3. ver. 326.

The Latin Lumen is the past participle of Lioman.

Long—The past participle of Lengian, extendere, producere. Nor can any other derivation be found for the Latin Longus*.

SLEEVE—A.-S. rlyr. Formerly called Canm-rlire: that with which the arm is covered: The past participle of Sleran, induere.

Sleeveless means without a cover, or pretence.

BED—i. e. Stratum. The past participle of Beddian, sternere. Therefore we speak of a Garden-bed and a Bed of Gravel, &c. And in the Anglo-Saxon Bedd is sometimes used for a table.

^{*} G. I. Vossius tells us—"Longus a Linea quæ porrecta est: Ita Isidorus. Vel potius a longa figura venabuli aut lanceæ, quam Græci λογχην vocant: Ita Cæsar Scaliger. Item Petrus Nunnesius."

But Isaac Vossius tells us—" Est ex Græco ογκος, λαογκος, λογκος: nisi forsan ex δολιχος, Æol. λοδιχος."

Path—The past tense and participle of Pessian, conculcare, pedibus obterere.*

- * [TRODE, TRADE, WENT.

CAGE. A place shut in and fastened, in which birds are confined. Also a place in which malefactors are confined.

GAGE. By which a man is bound to certain fulfilments.

WAGES. By which servants are bound to perform certain duties.

GAG. By which the mouth is confined from speaking.

KEG. In which fish or liquors are shut in and confined.

KEY. By which doors, &c. are confined and fastened.

QUAY. By which the water is confined and shut out [or in.]

All these I believe to be the past participle of the verb Eæzgian, obserare.

From the same Anglo-Saxon verb are the French Cage, Gage, Gages, Gageure, Engager, Quai; the Italian Gaggia, Gaggio, Gabbia; and the antient Latin Caiare: which have so much bewildered the different Etymologists.

GRAVE
GROTTO

Gnar and Gnær serve equally in the Anglo-Saxon for GRAVE or GROVE. GRAVE, GROVE, GROVE are the past tense and therefore past participle of Gnaran, fodere, insculpere, excavare.

"But o alas, the rhetorikes swete
Of Petrake fraunces that coude so endyte,

Ibid. pag. 197.

GRAFT (sometimes written GRAFF) is the same past tense Epap, with the participial termination ED. GRAF-ED, GRAF'D, GRAFT.

Sir T. More. De Quatuor Novissimis, pag. 85.

In GROT, from GRAFT (A broad) the F is suppressed, and GROTTO (or rather GROTTA*) is obliged to the Italians for its terminating vowel.

Hell—any place, or some place covered over *.

HEEL—that part of the foot which is covered by the leg †.

^{*} Minshew derives HELL from Exos, lacus—palus.

⁺ Minshew derives HEEL from κηλη, tumor. Skinner from "ήλος, clavus, et secundario, callosum illud tuberculum quod medici clavum dicunt; nos Angli, a Corn: fort. quia os hoc instar capitis clavi ferrei, vel potius clavi morbi, protuberat."

HALE—i. e. HEALED, or WHOLE.

["There he remaind with them right well agreed,

Faerie Queene, book 6. cant. 1. st. 47.]

Whole—the same as hale, i. e. covered.—It was formerly written hole, without the w.—As, a wound or sore is healed or whole, that is, covered over by the skin. Which manner of expression will not seem extraordinary, if we consider our use of the word Re-cover.

HALL—a covered building, where persons assemble, or where goods are protected from the weather †.

Les HALLES in French has the same signification.

"Ce sont des places et lieux publics couverts pour y vendre les denrées à l'abri."—"In quibus tempore pluviali omnes mercatores merces suas mundissime venderent."—"Le lieu auquel pour l'exercice du commerce on s'assemble de toutes parts, mesme es jours ordinaires de marché, et aussi pour conferer et communiquer."—"Domus quævis in qua merces plurimorum conservantur."

The French etymologists were all clear enough in the application of the word; but trifled egregiously when they sought its derivation from the Latin Aula, or Area,

^{*} HILL, Junius says—" videri potest abscissum ex xolom vel xolomos. Plures derivarunt ab High, altus."

[†] HALL, say the etymologists, from the Latin Aula and the Greek αυλη. Junius thinks from "άλως, atrium; vel ab αυλων, quod significat oblongum locum."

or Hallus " qui (say they) dans les loix barbares signifie Rameau." Or from the Greek αλια, αλισαι, α

Hold—As the Hold of a ship: in which things are covered; or the covered part of a ship †.

F.

I cannot perceive that HOLE always means covered; though it may in the instance you have chosen to produce. Cannot I drill a HOLE in the centre of this shilling? And then where will be the covering?

H.

After you have so drilled it, break it diametrically: and then where will be the HOLE? Of the two pieces each will have a notch in it; but no HOLE will remain.

^{*} Minshew derives HOLE from χοιλος, cavus. "Alludit etiam (says Skinner) αυλαξ, sulcus: αυλων, fossa seu convallis oblonga; γωλεα, latibula ferarum; χωλον, χολον, inter alia, alvus; et φωλεος, antrum.

[†] Skinner has well described HOLT and HOLD, though he missed their derivation. HOLD of a ship, he says—"sic dicitur contabulatio navis infima, ubi penus navis conditur." And HOLT—"Nemus seu arborum quarumvis densius consiturum multitudinem designat."

LEWD LEWD, in Anglo-Saxon Læped, is almost equi-LAY I valent to wicked; except that it includes no agency of infernal spirits: it means misled, led astray, deluded, imposed upon, betrayed into error. Lew'd is the past participle, and LAY is the past tense and therefore past participle of the Anglo-Saxon verb Læpan, prodere, tradere, To Delude, To Mislead.

Lewd, in its modern application, is confined to those who are betrayed or misled by one particular passion: it was antiently applied to the profanum vulgus at large; too often misled through ignorance.

F.

Our word MANY seems to me a strange word, and its use in our language still stranger. There is nothing like it, I believe, in the use of the equivalent words of any other languages. What is its intrinsic meaning? Is it a substantive or an adjective? What is the rule of its employment? Dr. Lowth is extremely puzzled with it: amongst other perplexing passages he cites the following:

"How MANY a message would he send."

Swift. Verses on his own Death.

On which, Lowth says—" He would send MANY a message—is right: but the question How, seems to destroy the unity or collective nature of the idea: and therefore it ought to have been expressed, if the measure would have allowed of it, without the Article, in the plural number,—" how MANY messages."

H.

The bishop mistakes in one point. "Many a message"—is not right: except by a corrupt custom. There is a corruption here in this familiar expression; which, not being observed by Lowth, made him suppose this a, to be an Article; and therefore made him attempt to arrange the use of it, as an Article, on such occasions; and to reduce it to some regularity.

"a made a finer end, and went away, and it had beene any christome child: a parted eu'n just betweene twelue and one. How now Sir Iohn (quoth I*) what man? Be a good cheare: so a cryed out, God, God, God, three or foure times: now I, to comfort him, bid him a should not thinke of God: I hop'd there was no neede to trouble himselfe with any such thoughts yet: so a bad me lay more clothes on his feet."—Henry V. pag. 75.

^{*} Because the third person singular of our English verbs is usually designated by eth or th; many ignorant persons, affecting to shew a superior propriety of speech, are shocked at the expression—Quoth I—as a false concord; and affectedly depart from the customary phrase, and write Quod I. But Quoth I, is strictly accurate for said I. The th in Quoth, does not designate the third person. The verb is Epesan, and its past tense is Epos or Quoth.

- So, in page 78 of the same play, Gower says to Fluellen—"Here a comes."

Sir T. More, as we have seen, writes—"Burne up, queth a."

So we say—John a Nokes, Tom a Stiles, Thomas a Becket, &c.

In all the above passages and in similar phrases, which are common enough, A by a slovenly pronunciation, stands sometimes for He, sometimes for She, and sometimes for Of. The use of A after the word MANY is a similar corruption for Of; and has no connection whatever with the Article A, i. e. One.

Instead of this corrupt A after MANY, was formerly written Of, without the corruption:

"Ye spend a great MEANY OF wordes in vayne."

Bishop Gardiner. Declaracion against Ioye, fol. 14.

"I have spoken a MEANY OF wordes." Ibid. fol. 24. and innumerable other instances may be produced of the same manner of expression. As for the "collective nature of the idea;" that is confined to the word MANY. MANY is indeed a collective term: and may therefore be preceded by the article A; but Message is not a collective term. Therefore—Many a message, is not right; except by a corrupt custom. It should be—"a many of messages."

Many, is supposed by Lye to be derived from man;—
"ac proprie de hominum multitudine usurpatum:" and thence, according to him, transferred to other things.
But many is merely the past participle of Menzan*,

^{* [&}quot; Thou bewray'dst his mothers wantonnesse,
When she with Mars was MEYNT in ioyfulnesse."

Faerie Queene, book 3. cant. 11. st. 36.]

miscere, To Mix, To Mingle: it means mixed, or associated (for that is the effect of mixing) subaud. company, or any uncertain and unspecified number of any things.

"And in her house she abode with such MEYNE
As tyl her honour nede was to holde."

Troylus, boke 1. fol. 157. pag. 2. col. 2.

"Nor be na wais me lyst nat to deny That of the Grekis MENYE ane am I."

Douglas, booke 2. pag. 41.

["The commoditie doth not countervaile the discommoditie; for the inconveniencies which thereby doe arise, are MUCH MORE MANY." Spenser's View of the State of Ireland. Todd's edit. 1805. pag. 367.]

Similar instances of the use of this word abound in all our antient authors.

Lowth observes that MANY is used "chiefly with the word Great before it." I believe he was little aware of the occasion for the frequent precedence of Great before Many: little imagining that there might be—a Few MANY, as well as a Great MANY. S. Johnson had certainly no suspicion of it: for he supposes Few and Many to be opposite terms and contraries: and therefore, according to his usual method of explanation, he explains the word Few, by—"Not many." What would have been his astonishment at the following lines? A comment of his upon the following passage, like those he has given on Shakespear, must have been amusing.

"In nowmer war they but ane FEW MENYE, Bot thay war quyk and valyeant in melle."

Douglas, booke 5: pag. 153.

F.

Will this method of yours assist us at all in settling the famous and long-contested passage of Shakespear in The Tempest?

(As I foretold you) were all spirits, and Are melted into ayre, into thin ayre:
And, like the baselesse fabricke of this vision,
The clowd-capt towres, the gorgeous pallaces,
The solemne temples, the great globe itselfe,
Yea, all which it inherit, shall dissolue,
And, like this insubstantiall Pageant faded,
Leaue not a RACKE behind." Tempest, pag. 15. col. 1.

Many persons, you know, and those of no mean authority, instead of RACKE read WRECK. And Sir Thomas Hanmer reads TRACK: which Mr. Steevens says—"may be supported by the following passage in the first scene of Timon of Athens"—

"But flies an eagle flight, bold, and forth on, Leaving no TRACT behind."

H.

The ignorance and presumption of his commentators have shamefully disfigured Shakespear's text. The first Folio, notwithstanding some few palpable misprints, requires none of their alterations. Had they understood English as well as he did, they would not have quarrelled with his language.

F.

But if RACKE is to remain, what does it mean?

"RACK (says Mr. Malone) is generally used by our ancient writers for a body of clouds sailing along; or rather, for the course of the clouds when in motion. But no instance has yet been produced, where it is used to signify a single small fleeting cloud; in which sense only it can be figuratively applied here. I incline therefore to Sir Thomas Hanmer's emendation; though I have not disturbed the text."

Dr. Johnson concurs with Malone. He says-

"RACK (Racka, Dutch. A track.) The clouds as they are driven by the wind."

Though I mention their opinions, I am not in the least swayed by their authority: for Shakespear himself gives a flat contradiction to their imputed signification of RACK; where he says, in Hamlet,

"But as we often see against some storme,
A silence in the heavens, the RACKE stand still,
The bold windes speechlesse, and the orbe below
As hush as death."

If the RACKE may stand still; it cannot be—"the course of the clouds when in motion." Nor—"the clouds as they are driven by the wind."

Upon this passage too, in the Third Part of Henry 6.

"Dazzle mine eyes, or doe I see three sunnes?
Three glorious sunnes, each one a perfect sunne,
Not separated with the RACKING clouds,
But seuer'd in a pale cleare-shining skye."

Upon this passage Mr. Malone quotes from Shake-spear's Sonnets,

"Anon permit the basest clouds to ride With ugly RACK on his celestial face."

Can Mr. Malone imagine that—"ugly RACK" means here—an ugly motion that rides on the sun's face*?

Flatter the mountain tops with sovereign eye.....

Upon the whole, What does RACK mean? And observe, you will not satisfy my question by barely suggesting a signification; but you must shew me etymologically, how the word RACK comes to have the signification which you may attribute to it.

H.

You ask no more than what should always be done by those who undertake to explain the meaning of a doubtful word. It surely is not sufficient to produce instances of its use, from whence to conjecture a meaning; though instances are fit to be produced, in order, by the use of the word, to justify its offered etymology.

RACK is a very common word, most happily used in The Tempest; and ought not to be displaced because the commentators know not its meaning. If such a rule for Anon permit the basest clouds to ride With ugly RACK on his celestial face."

Shakespear: Sonnet 33.

Now read the following passage in the First Part of Henry 4. pag. 50, where the same thought is expressed in different words.

"Yet heerein will I imitate the sunne,
Who doth permit the base contagious cloudes
To smother up his beauty from the world,
That when he please againe to be himselfe,
Being wanted, he may be more wondred at,
By breaking through the foule and ugly mists
Of vapours, that did seeme to strangle him."

N.B. In the Sonnet, it is—"permit the basest clouds"—and—"ugly RACK."

In the Play, it is—"permit the base contagious clouds"—and —" ugly mists of VAPOURS."] banishing words were adopted; the commentators themselves would, most of them, become speechless.

In Songs and Sonets by the Earl of Surrey and others, pag. 61. we read,

"When clouds be driven, then rides the RACKE."

By this instance also we may see that RACK does not mean the course of the clouds when in motion.

"Some time we see a clowd that's dragonish,
A VAPOUR some time, like a beare, or lyon.
That which is now a horse, euen with a thought,
The RACKE dislimes, and makes it indistinct
As water is in water."

Antony and Cleopatra, pag. 362. col. 1.

Mr. Steevens says—"The RACK dislimes, i. e. The fleeting away of the clouds destroys the picture."

But the horse may be dislimb'd by the approach of the RACK, as well as by the fleeting away of the clouds: For RACK means nothing but Vapour; as Shakespear, in a preceding line of this passage, terms it.

"The upper part of the scene, which was all of clouds, and made artificially to swell and ride like the RACK, began to open; and the air clearing, in the top thereof was discovered Iuno."

Ben Jonson: Masque.

"A thousand leagues I have cut through empty air,
Far swifter than the sayling RACK that gallops
Upon the wings of angry winds."

B. and Fletcher: Women pleas'd.

" — Shall I stray
In the middle air, and stay
The sayling RACK?"

Upon this passage the Glossarist of Douglas says— " WRACHIS, spirits, ghosts. We once thought that it might be a typographical error for Wrathis, t and c being written the same way in the manuscript. But we thought fit not to alter it."

What a mischievous fury have commentators and editors to alter those words of their author which they do not understand! The Glossarist of Douglas did well here not to yield to his inclination.

"A RECK, with us (says Mr. Ray, in his preface to North Country Words, page viii.) signifies, not a smoak, but a Steam, arising from any liquor or moist thing heated."

RACK means merely—That which is Reeked. And, whether written RAK, WRAICH, RECK, REIK, ROIK or REEKE, is the same word differently pronounced and spelled. It is merely the past tense and therefore past participle, peac or pec, of the Anglo-Saxon verb Recan, exhalare, To Reek. And is surely the most appropriate term that could be employed by Shakespear in this passage of The Tempest: to represent to us, that the dissolution and annihilation of the globe, and all which it inherit, should be so total and compleat;—they should so "melt into ayre, into thin ayre;"—as not to leave behind them even a Vapour, a Steam, or an Exhalation, to give the slightest notice that such things had ever been.

Since you seem to be in no haste to reply upon me, I conclude that the explanation is satisfactory. And on this subject of subaudition I will, at present, exercise your patience no further; for my own begins to flag. You have now instances of my doctrine in, I suppose, about a thousand words. Their number may be easily increased. But, I trust, these are sufficient to discard that imagined operation of the mind, which has been termed Abstraction: and to prove, that what we call by that name, is merely one of the contrivances of language, for the purpose of more speedy communication.

F.

You have at least amused me, and furnished me with matter for reflection: Conviction and satisfaction are plants of slower growth. But, to convince you that you have not tired me, I beg leave to remind you, that you some time since asserted that the Winds, as well as colours, must have their denomination from some circumstances attending them; and that there must be a meaning in each of their denominations. L'Orient and L'Occident, for instance, are intelligible enough; but how is it with the other names which all our Northern languages give to these same winds?

The EAST, the WEST, the NORTH, the SOUTH.

The French Ouest, Nord, and Sud.

The Dutch Oost, West, Noord, Zuid.

The German Ost, West, Nord, Sud.

The Danish Ost, Vest, Nord, Sud.

The Swedish Oster, Wester, Norr, Soder.

The Spanish language, besides Oriente, Levante, Poniente, Occidente, Aquilon, Septentrion, and Medio dia, has likewise Este, Oeste, Nord, Sur.

What do these mean? For when the English etymologist merely refers me to the Anglo-Saxon Eart, Pert, Nong, Sug, he only changes the written characters, and calls the same language by a different name; but he gives me no information whatever concerning their meaning: and, for any rational purpose, might as well have left me with the same words in the modern English character.

H.

Certainly. It is a trifling etymology that barely refers us to some word in another language, either the same or similar: unless the meaning of the word and cause of its imposition can be discovered by such reference. And permit me to add, that, having once obtained clearly that satisfaction, all etymological pursuit beyond it, is as trifling. It is a childish curiosity, in which the understanding takes no part, and from which it can derive no advantage.

Our winds are named by their distinguishing qualities. And, for that purpose, our ancestors (who, unlike their learned descendants, knew the meaning of the words they employed in discourse) applied to them the past participles of four of their common words in their own language: viz. Yprian, Peran, Nyppan, and Seohan. Irasci, Macerare, Coarctare, Coquere.

HAST The past participle of yngran or repgran, west irasci, is yngred, yngre, yngre: dropping the North for (which many cannot articulate) it becomes yre; and so it is much used in the Anglo-Saxon. They who cannot pronounce R, usually supply its place by A: hence, I suppose, EAST*, which means angry, enraged.

Though castles topple on their warders heads:
Though pallaces and pyramids do slope
Their heads to their foundations: though the treasure
Of nature's germaine tumble altogether

"YESTY waves (says S. Johnson), that is foaming or frothy."

A little matter however always makes the waves frothy. But Johnson knew what the YEAST of beer was; (which comes indeed from the same verb) and the epithet Yesty conveyed to him no stronger idea than that of fermentation. But YESTY here is the Anglo-Saxon yrciz, ierciz, procellosus, stormy, enraged: which much better accords with Shakespear's high-charged description than the wretched allusion to fermenting beer.

CHAPTER V.

THE SAME SUBJECT CONTINUED.

F.

I STILL wish for an explanation of one word more; which, on account of its extreme importance, ought not to be omitted. What is TRUTH?

You know, when Pilate had asked the same question, he went out, and would not stay for the answer*. And from that time to this, no answer has been given. And from that time to this, mankind have been wrangling and tearing each other to pieces for the TRUTH†, without once considering the meaning of the word.

^{*} See John 18.38. "What is Truth? said jesting Pilate; and would not stay for an answer."—Bacon's Essays.

^{+ [&}quot;CANONICA, in philosophical history, an appellation given by Epicurus to his doctrine of logic. It was called Canonica, as consisting of a few canons or rules for directing the understanding in the pursuit and knowledge of truth. Epicurus's Canonica is represented as a very slight and insufficient logic by several of the ancients, who put a great value on his ethics and physics. Laertius even assures us that the Epicureans rejected logic as a superfluous science; and Plutarch complains that Epicurus made an unskilful and preposterous use of syllogisms. But these censures seem too severe. Epicurus was not averse to the study of logic, but even

H.

In the gospel of John, it is as you have stated. But in the gospel of Nichodemus (which, I doubt not, had originally its full share in the conversion of the world to christianity*) Pilate awaits the answer, and has it——"Thou sayest that I am a kynge, and to that I was borne, and for to declare to the worlde that who soo be of TROUTH wyll here my worde. Than sayd Pylate, What is TROUTH, By thy worde there is but lytell TROUTH in the worlde. Our Lorde sayd to Pylate, Understande TROUTH how that it is judged in erth of them that dwell therin."—Nychodemus Gospell, chap. 2.

Well, What say you to it?

gave better rules in this art than those philosophers who aimed at no glory but that of logics. He only seems to have rejected the dialects of the Stoics, as full of vain subtilties and deceits, and fitted rather for parade and disputation than real use. The stress of Epicurus's Canonica consists in his doctrine of the criteria of truth. All questions in philosophy are either concerning words or things: concerning things we seek their truth; concerning words, their signification: things are either natural or moral; and the former are either perceived by sense or by the understanding. Hence, according to Epicurus, arise three criterions of truth, viz. sense, anticipation or prænotion, and passion. The great canon or principal of Epicurus's logic is, that the senses are never deceived; and therefore that every sensation or perception of an appearance is true."

Encyclopædia Britannica, vol. 4. pag. 119.]

* Nicodemus was the Patron Apostle of our ancestors the Anglo-Saxons and their immediate descendants: his Gospel was their favourite authority: and it was translated for their use, both into Anglo-Saxon and into old English; which translations still remain, and the latter of them was one amongst the first books printed. By Wynkyn de Worde. Anno 1511.

H.

That the story is better told by John: for the answer was not worth the staying for. And yet there is something in it perhaps: for it declares that "TRUTH is judged in erth of them that dwell therin." However, this word will give us no trouble. Like the other words, TRUE is also a past participle of the verb TKANAN, Tpeopan, confidere, To Think, To Believe firmly, To be thoroughly persuaded of, To Trow.

"Marke it, Nuncle.

Haue more then thou showest,

Speake lesse then thou knowest,

Lend lesse then thou owest,

Ride more then thou goest,

Learne more then thou TROWEST."

Lear, pag. 288.

This past participle was antiently written TREW*: which is the regular past tense of TROW. As the verbs To Blow, To Crow, To Grow, To Know, To Throw, give us in the past tense, Blew, Crew, Grew, Knew, Threw*. Of which had the learned Dr. Gil been aware, he would not, in his Logonomia Anglica, pag. 64, have told us that TRU, ratus, was "verbale anomalum of I TROU, reor."

Of this I need not give you any instances; because the word is perpetually written TREW, by all our antient authors in prose and verse, from the time of Edward the third to Edward the sixth.

TRUE, as we now write it; or TREW, as it was formerly written; means simply and merely—That which is TROWED †. And, instead of its being a rare commodity upon earth; except only in words, there is nothing but TRUTH in the world ‡.

That every man, in his communication with others, should speak that which he troweth, is of so great importance to mankind; that it ought not to surprize us, if we find the most extravagant and exaggerated praises bestowed upon truth. But truth supposes mankind: for whom and by whom alone the word is formed, and to whom only it is applicable. If no man, no truth.

Metastasio. La Morte di Catone. Ed. Parigi. tom. 10. pag. 167.]

^{* [}To Show—Past participle shew.

⁺ Mer. Casaubon derives TRUE from the Greek atpsky; and atpsky; from atgens, impavidus.

In cui tutti viviamo, a nostre menti

There is therefore no such thing as eternal, immutable, everlasting TRUTH; unless mankind, such as they are at present, be also eternal, immutable, and everlasting. Two persons may contradict each other, and yet both speak TRUTH: for the TRUTH of one person may be opposite to the TRUTH of another. To speak TRUTH may be a vice as well as a virtue: for there are many occasions where it ought not to be spoken.

["Sed incidunt sæpe tempora, cum ea quæ maxime videntur digna esse justo homine, eoque quem virum bonum dicimus, commutantur, fiuntque contraria; ut non reddere depositum, etiam nefarioso promissum facere, quæque pertinent ad veritatem et ad fidem, ea negare interdum et non servare, sit justum."

"Quantunque il simular sia le piu volte Ripreso, e dia di mala mente indicj; Si trova pur in molte cose e molte, Aver fatti evidenti beneficj; E danni, e biasmi, e morti aver gia tolte: Che non conversiam sempre con gli amici In questa, assai piu oscura che serena, Mortal vita; tutta d'invidia piena."

Orlando Furioso, cant. 4. st. 1.

F.

If TROWED be the single meaning of the term TRUE, I agree that these and many other consequences will follow: for there can be nothing TROWED; unless there are persons TROWING. And men may TROW differently. And there are reasons enough in this world, why every man should not always know what every other man thinks. But are the corresponding and the equivalent words in other languages resolvable in the same manner as TRUE? Does the Latin Verum also mean TROWED?

H.

It means nothing else. Res, a thing, gives us Reor, i. e. I am Thing-ed: Ve-reor, I am strongly Thinged; for Ve in Latin composition means Valde, i. e. Valide. And Verum, i. e. strongly impressed upon the mind, is the contracted participle of Vereor*. And hence the distinction between Vereri and Metuere in Latin: "Veretur liber, Metuit servus." Hence also Revereor.

F.

I am Thinged! Who ever used such language before? Why, this is worse than REOR, which Quinctilian (lib. 8. cap. 3.) calls a Horrid word. Reor, however, is a deponent, and means I think.

H.

And do you imagine there ever was such a thing as a deponent verb; except for the purpose of translation, or of concealing our ignorance of the original meaning of the verb? The doctrine of deponents is not for men, but for children; who, at the beginning, must learn implicitly, and not be disturbed or bewildered with a reason for every thing: which reason they would not understand, even if the teacher was always able to give it. You do not call Think a deponent. And yet it is as much a deponent as Reor. Remember, where we now say I Think, the antient expression was—Me thinketh, i. e. Me Thingeth, It Thingeth me.

^{*} Vossius doubts not that "Vereor est a Ve, id est Valde, et Reor." But he affirms that Verum is not "a Ve valde, et reor; quia Vera animum maxime afficiant; sed ab epsiv, hoc est, dicere; quia quod dicitur, est; quodque est, hoc dicitur; ut hæc duo sint artistpeporte, nempe in sermone tali, qualem esse convenit."—The meaning of the verb Est, would here have prevented his mistake.

"Where shall we sojourne till our coronation?
Where it THINKS best unto your royall selfe."

Richard 3d. pag. 186.

For observe, the terminating K or G is the only difference (and that little enough) between Think and Thing. Is not that circumstance worth some consideration here? Perhaps you will find that the common vulgar pronunciation of Nothink, instead of Nothing, is not so very absurd as our contrary fashion makes it appear.

Bishop Hooper so wrote it.

"Mens yeyes be obedient unto the Creatour, that they may se on THINK, and yet not another."

A Declaracion of Christe: By Iohan Hoper, cap. 8.

leopon nolde hine abenan, ne nan pice nær he hir mihre beon onzean Loder pillan he zepophre ealle DINC."

"Then had he no seat where he might sit, for that no part of heaven would bear him, nor was there any kingdom that might be his against the will of God who made all THINGS."

Ælfric. de Veteri Testamento, p. 4.]

But your question has almost betrayed me unaware into a subject prematurely; which will be more in its place, when, in some future conversation, we inquire into the nature of the Verb; and especially of the Verb Substantive (as it is called) To Be, Esse, Existere, Extaré, &c. Where we must necessarily canvass the meaning of the words Thing, Essence, Substance, Being, Real, &c.* And thither I desire to refer it.

^{*} Mr. Locke, in the second book of his Essay, chap. xxxii. treats of True and False ideas: and is much distressed throughout

In the mean time, if you reject my explanation of TRUE; find out, if you can, some other possible meaning of the word: or content yourself, with Johnson, by saying that TRUE is—"not False." And FALSE is—"not True." For so he explains the words.

F.

Be it so. But you have not answered my original question. I asked the meaning of the abstract TRUTH: and you have attempted to explain the concrete TRUE. Is TRUTH also a participle?

H.

No. Like North (which I mentioned before) it is the third person singular of the Indicative Trow. It was the whole chapter; because he had not in his mind any determinate meaning of the word TRUE.

In Section 2, he says—"Both ideas and words may be said to be true in a metaphysical sense of the word TRUTH; as all other THINGS, that any way EXIST, are said to be true; i.e. REALLY to BE such as they EXIST."

In Section 26, he says—"Upon the whole matter, I think that our ideas, as they are considered by the mind, either in reference to the proper signification of their names, or in reference to the REALITY of THINGS, may very fitly be call'd RIGHT or WRONG ideas. But if any one had rather call them TRUE or FALSE, 'tis fit he use a liberty, which every one has, to call things by those names he thinks best."

If that excellent man had himself followed here the advice which, in the ninth chapter of his third book, Sect. 16. he gave to his disputing friends concerning the word Liquor: If he had followed his own rule, previously to writing about TRUE and FALSE ideas; formerly written Trowth, Trowth, Trouth, and Troth*. And it means—(aliquid, any thing, something) that which one TROWETH, i. e. thinketh, or firmly believeth †.

F.

Here then is another source of what has been called abstract terms; or rather (as you say) another method of shortening communication by artificial substantives: for and had determined what meaning he applied to TRUE, BEING, THING, REAL, RIGHT, WRONG; he could not have written the above quoted sentences: which exceedingly distress the reader, who searches for a meaning where there is none to be found.

- * [" For I, playing no part of no one side, but sitting downe as indifferent looker on, neither Imperial nor French, but flat English, do purpose with TROTH to report the matter: and seyng I shall lyve under such a Prince as King Edward is, and in such a countrey as England is, (I thank God) I shall have neither neede to flatter the one side for profite, nor cause to fear the other side for displeasure. Therefore let my purpose of reportyng the TROUTH as much content you, as the meane handlyng of the matter may mislike you."—R. Ascham to John Astely, pag. 6.
- "Yet speaking thus much of TROUTH as was onely in the brest of Monsieur d'Arras on the Emperour's side, or in Baron Hadeck on Duke Maurice side, with whom and with on other of his counsell he onely conferred all his purposes three yeares before he brake out with the Emperor: But I meane such a TROTH as by conference and common consent amongest all the Ambassadores and Agentes in this Court and other witty and indifferent heades beside was generally conferred and agreed upon."—Ibid.

+ If Mr. Wollaston had first settled the meaning of the word, he would not have made TRUTH the basis of his system.

in this case one single word stands for a whole sentence. But is this frequently employed?

Yes. Very frequently. So, besides North and Truth, we have Strength—That which Stringeth, or maketh one Strong, A.-S. repenz. See before strong*.

MOUTH. (ΜΑΤGΙΦ)—That which Eateth; the third person of the Indicative of MATGAN, Metian, edere†. See before MEAT.

MOTH—The name of an insect that Eateth or "Fretteth a garment" (prectan, vorare). It is the same word as Mouth, differently written, pronounced and applied.

Junius indeed says, of моτн—" tanquam sit ex μοχθηγος, pravus; propter importunam scelestissimi insecti malitiam."

And Skinner—" Hoc credo, a μυδαω, uligine putresco."

^{*} Mer. Casaubon derives STRONG from Eστηριγμενος.

[&]quot; Videri potest (says Junius) affine Gr. Στραγγευω vel Στραγγιζω, torqueo, stringo."

Skinner derives it from the Latin Strenuus a Gr. Στρηνης, asper, acutus: he adds—" Alludit et Gr. ρωννυω, ρωννυμι, corroboro."

⁺ Minshew and Junius derive MOUTH from Mulos, sermo.

Tooth (Τλης)—That which Tuggeth; the third person singular of the Indicative of ΤληςλΝ, Τεοχαη, Το Tug. [The Collegers at Eton are jestingly called Tugmutton.]

FAITH. A.-S. pæ78—That which one covenanteth or engageth. It was formerly written faieth.

"Sainct Paule speaketh of them, where he writeth that the tyme shoulde come when some erring in the FAIETH, shoulde prohibite mariage." Dr. Martin. Of Priestes unlauful Mariages, ch. 2. p.15.

"The very profession of FAIETH, by the whiche we beleue on the Father, the Sonne, and the Holy Ghoste, of what writing haue we this?"—Ibid. pag. 20.

"In sainct Gregories daies, at whose handes Englande was learned the FAIETH of Christ."—Ibid. chap. 8. pag. 116.

It is the third person singular of the Indicative of Fæzan, pangere, pagere, To Engage, To Covenant, To Contract.

Smith—One who Smiteth, scil. with the hammer, &c.

Thus we have * Blacksmith, Whitesmith, Silversmith, Goldsmith, Coppersmith, Anchorsmith, &c.

"A softe pace he wente ouer the strete,
Unto a SMYTH men callen Dan Gerueys,
That in his forge SMITETH plowe harneys,
He sharpeth Shares and culters besyly."

Myllers Tale, fol. 14. pag. 2. col. 2.

This name was given to all who smote with the hammer. What we now call a carpenter, was also antiently called

^{[*} But the Islandic has also, (besides træsmid, a carpenter, husa smid, an architect &c.) vefsmid, a weaver, and even liod-smider, a poet. See Ihre v. Smida. And in A.-S. we have Piz-mid, a warrior, belli fabricator.—ED.]

a smith. The French word Carpenter was not commonly used in England in the reign of Edward the third. The translation of the New Testament, which is ascribed to Wicliffe, proves to us that at that time smith and Carpenter were synonymous: and the latter then newly introduced into the language.

"He bigan to teche in a sinagoge, and manye heeringe wondriden in his teching, seiynge, Of whennes ben alle these thingis to this man, and what is the wisdom whiche is gouun to him, and suche vertues that ben maad by hise hondis. Wher this is not a SMITH, ether a carpentere, the sone of Marie."

Mark, chap. 6. ver. 2, 3.

STEALTH—The manner by which one STEALETH.

Month—Moon was formerly written Mone; and month was written moneth. It means the period in which that planet Moneth, or compleateth its orbit.

"And he his trouth leyd to borowe To come, and if that he liue maie, Ageine within a MONETH daie."

Gower, lib. 4. fol. 67. pag. 1. col. 8.

"His wife unto the sea hym brought
With all hir herte, and hym besought,
That he the tyme hir wolde seyne,
Whan that he thought come ageyne,
Within, he saith, two MONETHES daie."

Ibid. lib. 5. fol. 79. pag. 2. col. 1.

EARTH—That which one Ereth or Eareth, i.e. plougheth. It is the third person of the Indicative of Cpian, arare, To Ere, To Eare, or To Plough.

"He that ERITH, owith to ERE in hope."

1 Corinthies, chap. 9. ver. 10.

"I have an halfe acre to ERIE by the hygh waye; "I Had I ERIED thys halfe acre and sowed it after," I would wend wyth you."

Vision of P. Ploughman, fol. 31, pag. 1.

- "The mans honde doth what he maie,
 To helpe it forth, and make it riche:
 And for thy men it delue and diche,
 And EREN it with strength of plough."

 Gower, lib. 1. fol. 26. pag. 1. col. 1.
- "I haue, God wotte, a large feld to ERE,
 And weked ben the oxen in the plowe."

 Knightes Tale, fol. 1. pag. 1. col. 1.
- "His five flokkis pasturit to and fra,
 Five bowis of ky unto his hame reparit,
 And with ane hundreth plewis the land he ARIT."

 Douglas, booke 7. pag. 226.
- "Taucht thame to grub the wynes, and al the art
 To ERE, and saw the cornes, and yoik the cart."

 Ibid. booke 13. pag. 476.
- "He that ERES my land, spares my teame, and gives mee leane to inne the crop."—Alls Well that Ends Well, pag. 233.
 - "That power I haue, discharge, and let them goe
 To EARE the land."

 Richard 2. pag. 35...

Instead of EARTH, Douglas and some other antient authors use ERD, i. e. Ered, Er'd—That which is ploughed. The past participle of the same verb.

- "The nicht followis, and euery wery wicht
 Throw out the ERD has caucht anone richt
 The sound plesand slepe thame likit best."

 Douglas, booke 4. pag. 118.
- "Thare speris stikkyng in the ERD did stand."

 Ibid. booke 6. pag. 187.

"Of youth thay be accustumed to be skant,
The ERDE with pleuch and harrowis to dant."

Douglas, booke 9. pag. 299.

"O thou Faunus, help, help, I the pray,
And thou, Tellus, maist nobill god of ERD*."

Ibid. booke 12. pag. 440.

MATH—A.-S. Mape's. The third person singular of the indicative of Mapan, metere, To Mow.

As Latter Math—i. e. That which one moweth † later, or after the former mowing.

ERD—That which is Er-ed. { En-1an. Ar-are. Tell-us—That which is Till-ed. { Til-1an. Tol-ere.

And it is a most erroneous practice of the Latin etymologists to fly to the Hebrew for whatever they cannot find in the Greek: for the Romans were not a mixed colony of Greeks and Jews; but of Greeks and Goths. As the whole of the Latin language most plainly evinces.

[† BOOTH—i.e. That which one Bougheth or maketh with Boughs.

See the bad derivations of BOOTH by Junius, Skinner, and S. Johnson. But it is tolerably well described by Johnson: "A house built of boards or Boughs, to be used for a short time." It is better described by Seneca:

"Mihi crede, felix illud seculum ante architectonus suit. Furce utrimque suspensee sulciebant casam: spissatis ramalibus, ac fronde congesta et in proclive disposita, decursus imbribus quamvis magnis erat. Sub his tectis habitavere securi."

Seneca, Epist. xc. 4ta edit. Lipsii, pag. 575.]

^{*}Where we now say EARTH, the Germans use ERDE; which Vossius derives from the Hebrew. "Ab Hebrew est etiam Germanicum ERD." From the Hebrew also he is willing to derive Tellus. But both ERD and Tellus are of Northern origin, and mean—

"Lo, now of al sic furour and effere,
The lattir Meith and terme is present here."

Douglas, booke 13. pag. 454.

Broth—the third person of the indicative of Bripan, coquere. That which one Bripe's. Hence the old English saying, of a man who has killed himself with drinking,—"He has fairly drunk up his Broth:"—The Italian Brodo is the past participle of the same verb. That which is Bripe's, Brodo.

WATH—i. e. where one Wadeth, the third person singular of Paoan, To Wade; is used commonly in Lincolnshire and in the North, for a Ford.

GARTH—i. e. Girdeth; is commonly used in the same counties for a yard.

FIFTH In the same manner are formed the names of Sixth our ordinal numbers, Fifth, Sixth, Ninth, Ninth, Tenth, Twentieth, &c. i. e. That unit which Fiv-eth, Six-eth, Nin-eth, Ten-eth, Twenty-&c. Jeth, &c. or, which maketh up the number Five, Six, Nine, Ten, Twenty, &c.

LENGTH | In the same manner are formed our words BREADTH | of admeasurement, Length, Breadth, Width, Width, Width | Depth, Heigth. Which are respectively the third persons singular, Lenges, Bpædes, Heigth | Pades, Dippes, Deares, of the indicatives of Lengian, extendere; Bpædan, dilatare; Padan, procedere; Dippan, submergere; Dæran, extollere.

F.

It has been remarked indeed that Milton always wrote Heigth, as our antient authors also did; but the word is now commonly written and spoken Height; which seems to oppose your etymology.

H.

That circumstance does not disturb me in the least: for the same thing has happened to many other words. But this interferes not at all with their meaning nor with their derivation; though it makes them not quite so easily discoverable.

So it has happened to MIGHT; which the Anglo-Saxons wrote Wæzeo or Wæzee, i. e. What one MAYETH—Quantum potest aut valet aliquis. MIGHT is the third person singular of the indicative of Wazan, posse, valere.

"MEATH, vox agro Linc. usitatissima, ut ubi dicimus, I give thee the MEATH of the buying, i. e. tibi optionem et plenariam potestatem pretii seu emptionis facio."—Skinner.

LIGHT: which the Anglo-Saxons wrote Leohrev, Leohv, and Leohv, i.e. quod illuminat. It is the third person of the indicative of Leohvan, illuminare.

SIGHT: which the Anglo-Saxons wrote Sid and Side, i. e. that faculty which seeth. The third person singular of the indicative of Seon, videre.

This change of E for I is nothing extraordinary: for, as they wrote ried or rid for Seeth; so they wrote rie for See, and piene for Seen. And Gower and Chaucer wrote sign for saw.

"And tho me thought that I SIGHE
A great stone from an hille on highe
Fell downe of sodeine auenture."

Gower. Prol. fol. 4. pag. 2. col. 1.

"He torneth him all sodenly
And sawe a ladie laie him by
Of eightene wynter age,
Whiche was the fairest of visage
That euer in all this worlde he SIGHE."

"Ful fayre was Myrthe, ful longe and high A fayrer man I neuer SYGH."

WEIGHT—A.-S. Pæzeo. The third person singular of the indicative of Pæzan, To Weigh.—The weight of any thing, is—That which it Weigheth.

WRIGHT: i. e. One that Worketh. The third person of the indicative of Pyncan, operari. As Shipwright, Cartwright, Wainwright, Wheelwright: One that worketh at Ships, Carts, Waggons, Wheels.

["Se ælmihtiza Scippend ze sputelode hine jýlfne þuph þa micclan peope þe he ze FORDTE æt spuman."

- "For very disorderly it were that thing created should be disobedient unto the Creator thereof. This world was not at first, but God himself made it."—Ibid.]

R and H, the canine and the aspirate, are the two letters of the alphabet more subject to transposition than any other. So work—aliquid operatum—which we retain as our substantive, is the regular past tense of Pypcan; which, by the addition of the participial termination ED, became worked, work'd, workt. This our ancestors, by substituting H for K or C, wrote Popht, and by transposition Ppoht; which we now write wrought, and retain both as past tense and past participle of Pypcan, To Work.

For Pince's, our ancestors wrote Pynht; and, by a transposition similar to the foregoing, Pnyht; which with us becomes wright.

These words, and such as these, are not difficult to discover. Because the terminating HT, instead of TH, leads to suspicion and detection. But there are many others, such as BLOW, HARM, ALE, KNAVE, ROOM*, &c. which are not so readily suspected as those I have before ^{*} ROOMTH (in the Anglo-Saxon Rýmbe), the third person singular of Rýman, is the favourite term of Drayton.

[&]quot;When wrathful heauen the clouds so lib'rally bestow'd
The seas (then wanting ROOMTH to lay their boist'rous load)
Upon the Belgian marsh their pamper'd stomachs cast."

Poly-olbion, song 5.

[&]quot;But Rydoll, young'st and least, and for the others pride Not finding fitting ROOMTH upon the rising side, Alone unto the West directly takes her way." Ibid. song 6.

[&]quot;Whose most renowned acts shall sounded be as long
As Britain's name is known; which spred themselves so wide
As scarcely hath for fame left any ROOMTH beside."

Ibid. song 8.

[&]quot;Nor let the spacious mound of that great Mercian king (Into a lesser ROOMTH thy burliness to bring) Include thee."

Ibid. song 8.

mentioned: because, in our modern English, we have totally cast off all the letters of the discriminating termination of the third person singular of the indicative of those verbs.

Sir Walter Raleigh, in his History of the World, instead of BLOW, uses BLOWTH (the third person singular of the indicative of Blopan, florere) as the common expression of his day.

"This first age after the flood was, by ancient historians, called Golden. Ambition and covetousness being as then but green and newly grown up; the seeds and effects whereof were as yet but potential, and in the BLOWTH and bud."

Part 1. book 1. chap. 9. sect. 3. pag. 107. edit. 1677.

"This princess having beheld the child; his form and beauty, though but yet in the BLOWTH, so pierced her compassion, as she did not only preserve it, and cause it to be fostered; but commanded that it should be esteemed as her own."

Part 1. book 2. chap. 3. sect. 3. pag. 148.

HARM. Our modern word HARM was in the Anglo-Saxon Ypmö or Iepmö, i. e. Whatsoever Harmeth or Hurteth: the third person singular of the indicative of ypman, or iepman, lædere.

["Di alijoe or heopa YRODE."—Ælfric. de Veteri Testamento, p. 12. See above, in p. 53.]

[&]quot;Kanutus, yet that hopes to win what he did lose,
Provokes him still to fight: and falling back where they Might field-ROOMTH find at large their ensigns to display,' Together flew again."

Poly-olbion, song 12.

[&]quot;Besides I dare thus boast, that I as far am known
As any of them all, the South their names doth sound;
The spacious North doth me: that there is scarcely found
A ROOMTH for any else, it is so fill'd with mine."

Ibid. song. 26.

ALE, was in the Anglo-Saxon Aloo, i. e. Quod accendit, inflammat: the third person singular of the indicative of Ælan, accendere, inflammare.

Skinner was aware of the meaning of this word, though he knew not how it was derived. He says of ALE—"Posset et non absurde deduci ab A.-S. Ælan, accendere, inflammare: Quia sc. ubi generosior est (qualis majoribus nostris in usu fuit) spiritus et sanguinem copioso semper, sæpe nimio, calore perfundit."

"They saw before them, far as they could vew, Full many people gathered in a CREW."

Faerie Queene, book 5. cant. 2. st. 29.]

KNAVE (A.-S. Enara) was probably Narao, i. e. Neharao, Genarao; qui nihil habet: the third person singular of Nabban, i. e. Nehaban. So Genær, Genæro, Næriz, Nærza, are in the Anglo-Saxon, mendicus, egens. In the same manner Nequam is held by the Latin etymologists to mean Nequam, i. e. One who hath nothing; neither goods nor good qualities. For—" Nequam servum, non malum, sed inutilem significat." Or, according to Festus—" Qui ne tanti quidem est, quam quod habetur minimi."

Of the same sort the Anglo-Saxons had likewise many other abstract terms (as they are called) from others of their verbs: of which we have not in our modern language any trace left. Such as Epyo, the third person singular of the indicative of Lpezan: Duzue, the third person singular of the indicative of Duzan, &c.

Chaucer indeed has used GRYTH.

"Christ said: Qui gladio percutit,
Wyth swerde shall dye.
He bad his priestes peace and GRYTH."

Plowmans Tale, fol. 94. pag 1. col. 2.

And from Duzu's we have Doughty still remaining in the language*.

But I think I need proceed no further in this course: and that I have already said enough, perhaps too much, to shew what sort of operation that is, which has been termed Abstraction.

^{* [}býnő, nocumentum, læsio, oppression; third person singular of býnan, opprimere.

CHAPTER VI.

OF ADJECTIVES.

F.

YOU imagine then that you have thus set aside the doctrine of Abstraction.

Will it be unreasonable to ask you, What are these Adjectives and Participles by which you think you have atchieved this feat? And first, What is an Adjective? I dare not call it Noun Adjective: for Dr. Lowth tells us, pag. 41, "Adjectives are very improperly called Nouns, for they are not the names of things."

And Mr. Harris (Hermes, book 1. chap. 10.) says—"Grammarians have been led into that strange absurdity of ranging Adjectives with Nouns, and separating them from Verbs; though they are homogeneous with respect to Verbs, as both sorts denote Attributes: they are heterogeneous with respect to Nouns, as never properly denoting Substances."

You see, Harris and Lowth concur, that Adjectives are not the names of things; that they never properly denote substances. But they differ in their consequent arrangement. Lowth appoints the Adjective to a separate station by itself amongst the parts of speech; and yet expels the Participle from amongst them, though it had long figured there: whilst Harris classes Verbs, Participles, and Adjectives together under one head, viz. Attributives*.

H.

These gentlemen differ widely from some of their ablest predecessors. Scaliger, Wilkins, Wallis, Sanctius, Scioppius, and Vossius, considerable and justly respected names, tell us far otherwise.

Scaliger, lib. 4. cap. 91. "Nihil differt concretum ab abstracto, nisi modo significationis, non significatione."

Wilkins, Part 1. chap. 3. sect. 8. "The true genuine sense of a Noun Adjective will be fixed to consist in this; that it imports this general notion, of pertaining to."

Wallis, pag. 92. "Adjectivum respectivum est nihil aliud quam ipsa vox substantiva, adjective posita."

Pag. 127. "Quodlibet substantivum adjective positum degenerat in adjectivum."

Pag. 129. "Ex substantivis fiunt Adjectiva copiæ, addita terminatione y &c.

Sanctius, ——

Harris should have called them either Attributes or Attributables. But having terminated the names of his three other classes (Substantive, Definitive, Connective) in Ive, he judged it more regular to terminate the title of this class also in Ive: having no notion whatever that all common terminations have a meaning; and probably supposing them to be (as the etymologists ignorantly term them) mere protractiones vocum: as if words were wiredrawn, and that it was a mere matter of Taste in the writer, to use indifferently either one termination or another at his pleasure.

F.

I beg you to proceed no further with your authorities. Can you suppose that Harris and Lowth were unacquainted with them: or that they had not read much more than all which you can produce upon the subject, or probably have ever seen?

H.

I doubt it not in the least. But the health of the mind, as of the body, depends more upon the digestion than the swallow. Away then with authorities: and let us consider their reasons. They have given us but one; and that one, depending merely upon their own unfounded assertion, viz. That Adjectives are not the names of things. Let us try that.

I think you will not deny that Gold and Brass and Silk, is each of them the name of a thing, and denotes a substance. If then I say—a Gold-ring, a Brass-tube, a Silk-string: Here are the Substantives adjective posita, yet names of things, and denoting substantives.

If again I say—a Golden ring, a Brazen tube, a Silken string; do Gold and Brass and Silk, cease to be the names of things, and cease to denote substantives; because, instead of coupling them with ring, tube and string by a hyphen thus—, I couple them to the same words by adding the termination en to each of them? Do not the Adjectives (which I have made such by the added termination) Golden, Brazen, Silken, (uttered by themselves) convey to the hearer's mind and denote the same things as Gold, Brass, and Silk? Surely the termination en takes nothing away from the substantives Gold, Brass, and Silk, to which it is united as a termination: and as surely it adds nothing to their signification, but this single circumstance, viz. that Gold, Brass and Silk, are designated, by this termination en, to be joined to some other substantive. And we shall find hereafter that en and the equivalent adjective terminations ed and ig (our modern y) convey all three, by their own intrinsic meaning, that designation and nothing else; for they mean Give, Add, Join. And this single added circumstance of "pertaining to," is (as Wilkins truly tells us) the only difference between a substantive and an adjective; between Gold and Golden, &c.

So the Adjectives Wooden and Woolen convey precisely the same ideas, are the names of the same things, denote the same substances; as the substantives Wood and Wool: and the terminating en only puts them in a condition to be joined to some other substantives; or rather, gives us notice to expect some other substantives to which they are to be joined. And this is the whole mystery of simple Adjectives. (We speak not here of compounds, ful, ous, ly, &c.)

An Adjective is the name of a thing which is directed to be joined to some other name of a thing. And the substantive and adjective so joined, are frequently convertible, without the smallest change of meaning: as we may say—a perverse nature, or, a natural perversity.

F.

Mr. Harris is short enough upon this subject; but you are shorter. He declares it "no way difficult" to understand the nature of a Participle: and "casy" to understand the nature of an Adjective. But to get at them you must, according to him, travel to them through the Verb.

He says, (pag. 184.)—"The nature of Verbs being understood, that of Participles is no way difficult. Every complete Verb is expressive of an Attribute; of Time; and of an Assertion. Now if we take away the Assertion, and thus destroy the Verb, there will remain the Attribute, and the Time, which make the essence of the Participle. Thus take away the Assertion from the Verb Γραφω, Writeth, and there remains the Participle Γραφων, Writing; which (without the Assertion) denotes the same Attribute, and the same Time."

Again, (pag. 186.)—"The nature of Verbs and Participles being understood, that of Adjectives becomes easy. A Verb implies both an Attribute, and Time, and an Assertion. A Participle implies only an Attribute and Time. And an Adjective only implies an Attribute."

H.

Harris's method of understanding easily the nature of Participles and Adjectives, resembles very much that of the Wag who undertook to teach the sons of Crispin how to make a shoe and a slipper easily in a minute. But he was more successful than Harris: for he had something to cut away, the boot. Whereas Harris has absolutely nothing to be so served. For the Verb does not denote any Time; nor does it imply any Assertion. No single word can. Till one single thing can be found to be a couple, one single word cannot make an Ad-sertion or an Ad-firmation: for there is joining in that operation; and there can be no junction of one thing.

F.

Is not the Latin Ibo an assertion?

H.

Yes indeed is it, and in three letters. But those three letters contain three words; two Verbs and a Pronoun.

All those common terminations, in any language, of which all Nouns or Verbs in that language equally partake (under the notion of declension or conjugation) are themselves separate words with distinct meanings: which are therefore added to the different nouns or verbs, because those additional meanings are intended to be added occasionally to all those nouns or verbs. These terminations are all explicable, and ought all to be explained; or there will be no end of such fantastical writers as this Mr. Harris, who takes fustian for philosophy.

In the Greek verb I-was (from the antient Es or the modern Esus:) in the Latin verb I-re; and in the English verb To-Hie, or to Hi, (A.-S. Dizan;) the Infinitive terminations was and re make no more part of the Greek and Latin verbs, than the Infinitive prefix To makes a part of the English verb Hie or Hi. The pure and simple verbs, without any suffix or prefix, are in the Greek I (or Es) in the Latin I; and in the English Hie or Hi. These verbs, you see, are the same, with the same meaning, in the three languages; and differ only by our aspirate.

In the Greek $\beta ov\lambda$ -omas or (as antiently) $\beta ov\lambda$ -sw or $\beta ov\lambda$ w, $\beta ov\lambda$ only is the verb; and omas, or sw, is a common removeable suffix, with a separate meaning of its own. So in the Latin Vol-o, Vol is the verb; and o a common removeable suffix, with a separate meaning. And the meaning of E_w in the one, and O in the other, I take to be $E_{\gamma w}$, E_{go} : for I perfectly concur with Dr. Gregory Sharpe, and others, that the personal pronouns are contained in the Greek and Latin terminations of the three persons of their verbs. Our old English Ich or Ig (which we now pronounce I) is not far removed from Ego.

Where we now use Will, our old English verb was Wol; which is the pure verb without prefix or suffix.

Thus then will this Assertion Ibo stand in the three languages: inverting only our common order of speech, — Ich Wol Hie or Hi, to suit that of the Greek and Latin;

English	•	•	•	Hi	Wol	Ich
Latin .	•	•	•	I	Vol	O
Greek	•	•	•	I	Βουλ	EW.

They who have noticed that where we employ a w, the Latin employs a v; and where the Latin employs a v, the Greek uses a β (as Δαβιδ, Βεσπεσιανος, &c.); will see at once, that Wol, Vol, Boul, are one and the same word. And the progress to Ibo is not very circuitous nor unnatural. It is Iboul, Ibou, Ibo. The termination Bo (for Βουλεω) may therefore well be applied to denote the future time of the Latin verbs; since its meaning is I Woll (or Will). So it is, Amaboul, Amabou, Amabo, &c.*

^{*} When Varchi undertook to shew that the Italian language had more Tenses than the Greek and Latin; Castelvetro objected that the Italian had no Future Tense, as the Latin had.—"Conciossiacosachè la lingua nostra manchi d'un Tempo principale, cio è del futuro, nol potendo significare con una voce simplice: ma convenendo che lo significhi con una composta; cio è con lo 'nfinito del verbo e col presente del verbo Ho: come Amare Ho, Amare Hai, Amare Hai, "&c.

Castelvetro accounts very properly for the Italian future Tense Amerò, Amerai, Amera, (and so he might for Sarò, &c. i. e. Essere ho, &c.) But it seems to me extraordinary that he should

But let us, if you please, confine ourselves at present to Mr. Harris. He says—"Take away the Assertion from the verb $\Gamma_{\varphi\alpha\varphi\omega}$, Writeth, and there remains the Participle $\Gamma_{\varphi\alpha\varphi\omega}$, Writing."—This is too clumsy to deserve the name of legerdemain. Take away ω and eth from $\Gamma_{\varphi\alpha\varphi\omega}$ and Writeth, and there remain only $\Gamma_{\varphi\alpha\varphi}$ and Writ: which are indeed the pure verbs: and a man must be perfectly blind not to see that they are all which remain, until Harris whips in the other terminations $\omega \omega$ and ing. But let us wilfully shut our eyes, and pass over this clumsy trick of his: how will he now destroy the Participle, as he before destroyed the Verb; and so get on to his Adjective? He cannot. He does not even attempt it. Nor can he ever arrive at an Adjective through a Verb.

In Γ_{φ} and Writ there is neither Assertion nor Time. And if there had been, as Harris supposed, an Assertion implied by those words; it must, by his own doctrine, have been implied by the terminations ω and eth: for by removing ω and eth, he says, he takes away the Assertion and thereby destroys the Verb.

have supposed it possible that the Latin, or any other language, could, by the simple verb alone, signify the additional circumstances of Manner, Time, &c. without additional sounds or words to signify the added circumstances: and that he should imagine that the distinguishing terminations in any language were not also added words; but that they sprouted out from the verb as from their parent stock. If it were so, how would he account for the very different fruit borne by the same plant, in the same soil, at different times? Antiently the Romans said Audi-bo: then Audi-am: now Udir-ò, i. e.

Audi(re) Volo . . . I will to hear.

Audi(re) Amo . . . I desire to hear.

Udir(e) Ho . . . I have to hear.

Again, If in Γ_{e} and V_{e} and V_{e} there had been any denotation of V_{e} it must have been in the terminations and V_{e} and V_{e} and V_{e} in V_{e} and V_{e} and V_{e} in V_{e} and V_{e} in V_{e} and V_{e} in V_{e} there has given us no V_{e} and V_{e} in V_{e} the V_{e} and V_{e} in V_{e} the V_{e} and V_{e} in V_{e} and V_{e} and V_{e} in V_{e} in V_{e} and V_{e} in V_{e} and V_{e} in V_{e} and V_{e} in $V_$

F.

Though there can be no Assertion without a verb; I am not, with Mr. Harris, ready to contend that there can be an Assertion by the Verb alone. But I have always hitherto believed, and still continue to believe, that Time is denoted both by Verbs and Participles.

H.

If you are satisfied concerning the Adjective, I will willingly proceed with you to an examination of the latter point. If not, continue in your present belief; that we may not confound our subjects.

F.

You have always expressed a high opinion of Richard Johnson: and, in what you condemn, Lowth has only followed his directions.

R. Johnson says—"It had been better in the enumeration of the Parts of Speech, to have made the Substantive and the Adjective two distinct parts of speech: and to have comprehended the Participle under the Adjective. For the Substantive and the Adjective are two very different parts of speech." And again,—"The question is, whether the Adjective be a Noun, or Name of a thing;

Now I suppose nobody will say the Adjective is equally, or as much the Name of a thing, as the Substantive. The Substantive represents All that is essential to the nature of the thing: as Homo, or Man, represents Animal rationale, or A rational living creature. But Bonus, Good, represents only an accidental quality; which, though morally necessary is not naturally so, but merely accidental. So that though a Man may be called Good: and therefore Good, in some sense, may be said to be his name; yet it is not equally or as much his name, as Man. This last representing all that is essential to his nature; the other only what is accidental."

Ben Jonson, whom you likewise esteem, followed the opinion of Frischlinus; that the distinction between substantive and adjective arises from the latter's being common to three genders.—" For a substantive is a Noun of one only gender, or (at the most) of two. And an Adjective is a Noun of three genders, being always infinite."

And some Grammarians have said that an Adjective only connetes, and means nothing by itself.

"Nel modo che l'Accidente s'appoggia alla Sustanza, l'Aggiuntivo s'appoggia al Sustantivo."—" E come l'Accidente non puo star senza la Sustanza, così (gli Aggiuntivi) non possono star nell'orazione senza un Sustantivo: e standovi, non vi starebbon a proposito; perchè non significherebbon Niente."—Buonmattei.

H.

The opinion of Frischlinus is sufficiently confuted by Vossius*. And, notwithstanding R. Johnson's confident assertion that nobody would say so, I maintain that the Adjective is equally and altogether as much the Name of a Thing, as the Noun substantive. And so say I of ALL words whatever. For that is not a word which is not the name of a thing. Every word, being a sound significant, must be a sign; and, if a sign, the Name, of a Thing. But a Noun substantive is the Name of a thing—and nothing more. And indeed so says Vossius—" Nec rectius Substantivum definitur—Quod aliquid per se significat.—Nam omnis vox ex instituto significans, aliquid significat per se:"—De Analog. lib. 1. cap. 6.

I mean not to withdraw any portion of the respect which I have always declared for R. Johnson, B. Jonson, or Buonmattei. But it does not follow that I should be compelled jurare in verba upon every thing they have advanced. They were Grammarians, not Philosophers, Were I to compose in Latin, I certainly should not venture to use an uncommon supine or a compared participial, without first consulting R. Johnson: but for the philosophy of language I cannot consider him as an authority. How strangely does he here impose upon himself with his example of Good Man: concluding, because Good does not signify the same thing which Man signifies, that therefore Good signifies nothing, i. e. is not the name of any thing. So, if he had reversed his instance and chosen this—Human Goodness:—He must, by the same kind of reasoning, have concluded that Goodness was, but that Human was not the Name of a thing. Still more absurd will this appear, if, instead of Human, we employ Wallis's Adjective and say—Man's Goodness: for then (if Wallis is right in regard to the genitive) this reasoning will prove that—Man's—is not the name of a thing.

^{*} De Analogia, lib. 1. cap. 6.

But, to return to R. Johnson's instance of Good Man.

"The substantive Man (he says) represents all that is essential to the nature of the thing; but the adjective Good represents only an Accidental quality." Which, when well considered, amounts to no more than this: That the substantive Man represents all that is signified by the term Man; but that the adjective Good does not represent any idea that is signified by the term Man. And this is very true. But whoever will reflect a moment, will see that each of these words, both Good and Man, represents equally all that is essential to the nature of the thing of which Good and Man is respectively the sign. Good indeed does not represent (i. e. is not the sign of) any idea signified by the term Man, nor was it intended: any more than the term Man represents (i.e. is the sign of) any idea signified by the term Good. But Good represents all the ideas signified by the term Goodness. And all the difference between a substantive (as Goodness) and its corresponding adjective (Good) is; that, by some small difference of termination, we are enabled when we employ the sign of an idea, to communicate at the same time to the hearer, that such sign is then meant to be added to another sign in such a manner as that the two signs together may answer the purpose of one complex term. This contrivance is merely an Abbreviation in the sorts of words to supply the want of an Abbreviation in Terms. For instance—A Holy Man. Here is a difference of termination in one signHoliness—to shew us that it is to be joined to another sign—Man: and that these two together are to serve the purpose of one complex term. In this last instance, our language enables us to exchange them both for one complex term, (which we cannot do with Good Man) and, instead of a Holy Man, to say a Saint.

In some cases our language is so deficient as not to enable us to use either of these methods, when we want to express a certain collection of ideas together; and we then have recourse sometimes to Prepositions, and sometimes to another expedient: If we speak, we do it by joining the terms close in pronunciation: if we write, we do it by using a mark of junction, thus -. Which mark is not a word nor a letter, because it is not the sign of a sound; but is itself, what a word should be, the immediate sign of an idea; with this difference, that it is conveyed to the eye only, not to the ear. Thus Sea-weed, Ivory-wand, Shell-fish, River-god, Weather-board, Hail-storm, Country-house, Family-quarrel, &c.

For these collections of ideas our language does not furnish us either with a complex term, or with any change of termination to Sea, Ivory, Shell, River, Weather, Hail, Country, Family, &c. by which to communicate to the hearer our intention of joining those terms to some other term.

That an Adjective therefore cannot (as the Grammarians express it) "stand by itself, but must be joined to some other noun;" does not proceed from any difference in the nature of the idea or of the thing of which the Adjective is the sign: but from hence, that having added to the sign of an idea that change of termination which, by agreement or common acceptance, signifies that it is to be joined to some other sign, the hearer or reader expects that other sign which the adjective termination announces. For the adjective termination of the sign sufficiently informs him, that the sign, when thus adjectived, is not to be used by itself or to stand alone; but is to be joined to some other term*.

Yet we very well know by the Adjective alone, as well as by the substantive alone, of what idea or collection of ideas the term mentioned (whether Adjective or Substantive) is the sign: though we do not know, till it is mentioned, to what other sign the Adjective sign is to be added.

It is therefore well called Noun adjective: for it is the Name of a thing, which may coalesce with another Name of a thing.

But if indeed it were true that Adjectives were not the names of things; there could be no Attribution by Adjectives: for you cannot attribute Nothing. How much more ^{*} Though most languages are contented to give a distinguishing termination only to the added sign; In the Persian language the sign which is to receive the addition of another sign to it, has a distinguishing termination to inform the reader when it is to receive an addition. So that in the Persian language there are Substantives which cannot stand alone, but must be joined to some other word in the same sentence. But I hope it is not necessary to travel so far as to Persia, to convince our grammarians of the impropriety of making its inability to stand alone in a sentence, the distinguishing mark of an Adjective; if they will be pleased only to recollect, that no Substantive, in any of its oblique cases, can stand alone any more than the Adjective. And this latter circumstance might perhaps incline Wallis to call our Genitive, an Adjective: for Man's cannot stand alone, any more than Human.

comprehensive would any term be by the attribution to it of Nothing? Adjectives, therefore, as well as Substantives, must equally denote Substances: and Substance is attributed to Substance by the adjective contrivance of language.

F.

Not so. You forget the distinction which Scaliger makes between Substance and Essence.

"Substantiæ appellatione abusi sunt pro Essentia: sicuti Græci nomine souæ, in prædicamento. Namque souæ etiam convenit rebus extra prædicamenta, ut Deo. At Substantia neque extra prædicamenta, neque in omnibus; sed in iis tantum quæ substant Accidentibus."

It is not therefore necessary that Adjectives should denote Substances, or else that there would be nothing attributed by their means.

H.

Essence or Accident, that is attributed. Something must be attributed, and therefore denoted by every Adjective. And Essence, Substance and Accident, are all likewise denoted by Substantives—by grammatical substantives at least. For, pray, what is Scaliger's own consequence from the words you have quoted?—That Whiteness is not a Substantive, but Nomen essentiale. By which reasoning, you see, the far greater part of grammatical substantives are at once discarded, and become Accidentalia, or philosophical Adjectives. But that is not all the mischief: for the same kind of reasoning will likewise make a great number of the most common grammatical Adjectives become philosophical Substantives, as denoting Substances. For both Substances and Essences (if you chuse to have those terms, those ignes forces) are equally and indifferently denoted sometimes by grammatical substantives and sometimes by grammatical adjectives.

And this difficulty has at all times puzzled all the grammarians who have attempted to account for the parts of speech by the single difference of the Things or Ideas of which the different sorts of words were supposed to be the signs. And though every one who has made the attempt, has found it miscarry in his hands; still each has pursued the beaten track, and employed his time and pains to establish a Criterion which, in the conclusion, each has uniformly abandoned. And they all come at last to such paltry jargon as this of the authors of the Encyclopédie--- "Ce sont des Noms substantifs par Imitation." They must equally be obliged to acknowledge that substantial Adjectives are also des Noms adjectifs par imitation. Thus Essential terms are grammatical substantives only by imitation: and substantial terms are grammatical adjectives only by imitation: and unfortunately this does not happen only now and then, like an exception to a general rule; but this perplexing imitation is so universally practised, that there is not any Accident whatever which has not a grammatical substantive for its sign, when it is not attributed: nor is there any Substance whatever which may not have a grammatical Adjective for its sign, when there is occasion to attribute it. They are therefore forced to give up at last every philosophical difference between the parts of speech, which they had at first laid down as the cause of the distinction; and are obliged to allow that the same words (without any alteration in their meaning) are sometimes of one part of speech and sometimes of another.—" Ces mots sont pris tantôt adjectivement, tantôt substantivement. Cela depend de leur service. Qualifient-ils? Ils sont Adjectifs. Designent-ils des Individus? Ils sont donc Substantifs."

Cela depend de leur service!—Does it so? In the name of Common sense then and Common patience, why have you troubled us with a heap of stuff upon which it does not depend? But however neither is this altogether true. Cela ne depend pas de leur service. The same word is not sometimes an Adjective and sometimes a Substantive. But it is true that some languages have such defects, that, for want of an adjective distinction to some of their terms, they are forced to attribute the term itself without any adherent intimation of its attribution. Which defect (viz. the want of an adjective termination) was, I suppose, originally the case with all terms in the rude state of all languages: and this defect still continues most in the most imperfect and unimproved languages. The want of an adjective termination to the signs of ideas, is more easily borne in languages where the added sign is closely joined to the sign which it is intended to accompany. But, without an adjective termination, all transposition would be excluded: and therefore the transposed languages are never so deficient in this respect, as the others. In English, instead of adjectiving our own substantives, we have borrowed, in immense · numbers, adjectived signs from other languages; without borrowing the unadjectived signs of those same ideas: because our authors frequently found they had occasion for the former, but not for the latter. And, not understanding the nature of language, or the nature of the very benefit they were receiving; they did not, as they might and should have done, improve their own language by the same contrivance within itself; but borrowed from other languages abbreviations ready made to their hands.

&c. &c.

^{*} With the Christian religion were very early introduced to our ancestors the Greek words, Church, Parish, People, Alms: which they corrupted and used as substantives, a long time before they wanted them in an adjectived state. When the latter time arrived, they were incapable of adjectiving these words themselves, and were therefore forced to seek them in the original language. Hence the Adjectives are not so corrupt as the Substantives. And hence the strange appearance of Eleemosynary, a word of seven syllables,

The adoption of such words as these, was indeed a benefit and an improvement of our language; which however would have been much better and more properly obtained by adjectiving our own words. For, as the matter now stands, when a poor foreigner has learned all the names of things in the English tongue, he must go to other languages for a multitude of the adjectived names of the same things. And even an unlearned native can never understand the meaning of one quarter of that which is called his native tongue.

F.

You have not all this while taken any notice of the account given of the Adjective by Messrs. de Port Royal. And I wonder at it the more; because I know they have always been especial favourites of yours.

H.

They likewise make Substance and Accident the foundation of the difference between Substantive and Adjective: and that, I think, I have already sufficiently confuted.

F.

True. But they acknowledge that this distinction is not observed in languages at present. They only affirm that it was originally the cause of the difference. But as the Adjective of the monosyllable Alms; which itself became such by successive corruptions of Examporum, long before its Adjective was required: having successively exhibited itself as Almosine, Almosie, Almose, Almes, and finally Alms: whilst in the French language it appeared as Almosine, Almosne, Aumosne, Aumosne, Aumosne, Aumosne, Aumosne,

^{* &}quot;Les objets de nos pensées sont ou les choses, ce qu'en appelle ordinairement Substance; ou la maniere des choses ce qu'en they say, that, after this had been done by the first Framers of language, Men did not stop there, but proceeded further; and signified both Substance and Accident indifferently (as we see all languages now do) either by Substantives or Adjectives; sometimes by the one and sometimes by the other.

H.

If this distinction between Substance and Accident does not cause the difference between our Substantives and Adjectives, why is it now proposed to us as such?

F.

Aye, But this was originally the cause.

H.

Was it indeed? Pray, When? Where? In the remains of what rude language is any trace of this to be found? I assert hardily, in none. I maintain that it was not oriappelle Accident. Et il y a cette difference entre les choses ou les Substances, et la maniere des choses ou des Accidents; que les Substances subsistent par elles-mêmes, au lieu que les Accidents ne sont que par les Substances. C'est ce qui a fait la principale difserence entre les mots qui signifient les objets des pensées. Car qui signifient les Substances ont eté appellés Noms Substantifs; et ceux qui signifient les Accidents, en marquant le sujet auquel ces accidents conviennent, Noms Adjectifs. Voilà la premiere Origine des noms Substantiss et Adjectiss. Mais on n'en est pas demeuré là : et il se trouve qu'on ne s'est pas tant arrêté à la signi-Acation, qu'à la maniere de signifier. Car, parceque la Substance est ce qui subsiste par soi-même, on a appellé Noms Substantifs tous ceux qui subsistent par eux-mêmes dans le discours : encore même qu'ils signifient des Accidents. Et au contraire, on a appellé Adjectifs ceux-mêmes qui signifient des Substances, lorsque par leur maniere de signifier ils doivent etre joints à d'autres noms dans le discours."

ginally, or at any time, the cause of the difference between Substantive and Adjective in any language. But they say, men did not stop there; but proceeded furthers Proceeded! To do what? Why, to do directly the contrary. Can this be called Proceeding? What a wretched abuse of words is this; and what gross shifting; in order to appear to give a solution of what they did not understand. However, by this proceeding, you see we must abandon totally their first Criterion. For it now turns out, that Adjectives are indifferently the signs both of Substances and Accidents: and Substantives are indifferently the signs both of Accidents and Substances. So that we are now just where we were, without any Criterion at all: for the progress has destroyed the Criterion. The original cause of the distinction and the progress of it, operate together like the signs plus and minus, leaving nothing to our quotient of knowledge. 15 . 15.

However, let that pass. It is only so much time thrown away in appearing learned. Come, Let us now, if you please, have some Criterion which they will stand by. What now do they lay down as the real difference between an Adjective and a Substantive?

F.

The real remaining difference, according to them, is, that a Substantive has but one signification*: it is the sign of that which it signifies, i. c. that which you understand by it; and no more. But an Adjective has two significations: It is not only the sign of that which you understand by it, and which they call its distinct signification; but it is also the sign of something which you do not, and never can understand by it alone: and this last they call its confused signification.

^{* &}quot;Ce qui fait qu'un Nom ne peut subsister par soi-même, est, quand outre sa signification distincte, il en a encore une confuse; qu'on peut appeller Connotation. Cette connotation fait l'Adjectif."

H.

Confused! You understand them, I suppose, to mean, like Mr. Harris, an obscure signification.

F.

Yes, an obscure signification. But you must remember that, though this signification is confused, it is the most direct*. And that the distinct signification is the most indirect.

H.

So then it appears at last, that the distinguishing Criterion of an Adjective is this obscure signification: for a clear, distinct signification the Adjective has in common with the Substantive.—"Blanc signifie la Blancheur d'une maniere aussi distincte que le mot même de Blancheur."

Now is it necessary here, in order to shew the absurdity of this account, to repeat again that an obscure

^{* &}quot;Il ne faut pas conclure que les Adjectifs signifient plus directement la forme que le sujet; comme si la signification la plus distincte étoit aussi la plus directe. Car, au contraire, il est certain qu'ils signifient le sujet directement, et comme parlent les grammairiens, In Recto, quoique plus confusement: et qu'ils ne signifient la forme qu'indirectement, et comme ils parlent encore, In Obliquo, quoique plus distinctement. Ainsi, Blanc, candidus, signifie directement ce qui a de la Blancheur, habens candorem; mais d'une maniere fort confuse ne marquant en particulier aucune des choses qui peuvent avoir de la blancheur. Et il ne signifie qu'indirectement la blancheur; mais d'une maniere aussi distincte que le mot même de Blancheur, candor."

(i. e. an unknown signification) is not any signification? Besides, there is a gross mistake made between an adjected and an adjective word: that is, between a word laid close to another word, and a word which may lye close to another word. Let me ask you, How is it with any Adjective taken by itself? Till it is joined to some other word, can you possibly discover what you call its confused meaning? Blanc has its distinct meaning when mentioned by itself; and it is then an Adjective. But what you call its confused meaning can never appear till it is adjected: and is then shewn only and altogether by the word to which it is adjected. For, if it were otherwise, it would follow, that the same word White must be, at the same time, the sign of Horse and House and Man, and every thing else to which the Adjective White may at any time be added. And, what is still more, the Substantives themselves would at once be stripped of their rank and definition, of being the signs of ideas; and would become the mere lights to make visible the confused and obscure signification of the Adjectives.

But surely I need say no more concerning the Adjective: or take up your time with combating its signification in recto and in obliquo.

As little notice do the dull Modificatives of Buffier* deserve; or the gay Lacqueys of the pleasant Abbé Girard:

[&]quot;Ils sont dits Noms Adjectifs, quand les objets sont considerés comme revêtus de quelques qualités; parce qu'ils ajoutent une qualité à l'objet. Mais, au fond, l'objet n'est bien designé que par les Noms Substantifs, qui par cet endroit, sont proprement les seuls Noms. Au fond, les Adjectifs sont de vrais Modificatifs des noms; mais nous les regardons ici comme des noms, en tant qu'ils who, after providing his Substantive with Running Footmen to announce his approach (in the Article) could do no less for a word of such importance than furnish him, when occasion offered, with a numerous train in livery to support the eclat of his appearance.

representent moins une qualité ou circonstance de l'objet, que l'objet même en tant que revêtu de cette qualité ou circonstance.

- "C'est une sorte de subtifité que nous indiquons pour prevenir celles qu'on pourroit nous objecter. N'omettons pas une reflexion importante: savoir, qu'un Nom Adjectif devient souvent Substantif. En effet, sa nature étant d'exprimer la qualité d'un objet, si cette qualité est le sujet même dont on parle, alors selon notre principe generale ce sera un Nom Substantif.
- "On demande, si le nom de Roi est Substantif ou Adjectif? Il est l'un et l'autre selon l'emploi qu'on en fait.
- "Au reste, tous les noms qui, d'eux-mêmes sont Adjectifs, ne sont pas censez tels dans l'usage commun de la grammaire; qui depend en ce point comme en une infinité d'autres, d'un usage arbitraire. Car elle n'appelle ordinairement Adjectifs, que ceux qui sans changer, ou sans presque changer d'inflexions et de terminaison, se joignent indifferemment à des noms substantifs de divers genres; c'est à dire à des noms qui reçoivent avant eux la particule Le, ou la particule La, &c.
- "Au contraire les mots Roi, Magistrat, &c. ne sont jamais censez Adjectifs dans l'usage de la grammaire; quoiqu'ils le soient en effet tres souvent."
- * "Les Adjectifs ne sont destinés qu'à un service subalterne, consistant à qualifier les denominations. Ils sont du cortege des Substantifs, en portent les Livrées, et servent à leurs decorations. Voilà pourquoi on leur a donné le nom d'Adjectifs, qu'annonce un personnage de la suite d'un autre. Cependant quoique placés dès leur origine dans l'etat de dependance et de soumission, ils ne laissent pas que d'etre par leurs couleurs et par leur magnificence une des plus brillantes parties de la parole, un champ fertile pour la poesie, une ressource delicate pour les grands orateurs, et le point capital des mediocres."

If, in what I have said of the Adjective, I have expressed myself clearly and satisfactorily; you will easily observe that Adjectives, though convenient abbreviations, are not necessary to language: and are therefore not ranked by me amongst the Parts of Speech. And perhaps you will perceive in the misapprehension of this useful and simple contrivance of language, one of the foundations of those heaps of false philosophy and obscure (because mistaken) metaphysic, with which we have been bewildered. You will soon know what to do with all the technical impertinence about Qualities, Accidents, Substances, Substrata, Essence, the adjunct Natures of things, &c. &c. And will, I doubt not, chearfully proceed with me, in some future conversation, to "a very different sort of Logick and Critick than what we have been hitherto acquainted with." Of which, a knowledge of the nature of language and of the meaning of words, is a necessary forerunner.

F.

That must be seen hereafter. But, if this be the case with Adjectives, whence arise the different sorts of terminations to different Adjectives; when one sort of termination would have answered the purpose of attribution? Why have we Adjectives ending in ty, ous, ful, some, les, ish, &c.? For you have taught me that terminations are not capriciously or fortuitously employed; though you will not allow them to be often the original and mere productions of art.

H.

Adjectives with such terminations are, in truth, all compound words: the termination being originally a word added to those other words, of which it now seems merely the termination; though it still retains its original and distinct signification. These terminations will afford sufficient matter for entertainment to etymologists, which is not necessary for our present investigation. They are now more numerous in our language than they were formerly: because our authors have not been contented only to supply our defects by borrowing Adjectives which we wanted in our language: but they have likewise borrowed and incorporated many adjective terminations which we did not want, being before in possession of correspondent terminations of our own, which answered the same purpose with those which they have unnecessarily adopted. So that we have now in some words a choice of different terminations by which to express one and the same idea: Such as, Bountiful and Bounteous, Beautiful and Beauteous, Joyful and Joyous, &c.* Which choice is indeed of advantage to the variety and harmony of the language, but is unphilosophical and unnecessary.

mination was originally the case with all terms in the rude state of all languages. But this is only your supposition in order to support your own theory. Does there, from all antiquity, remain a single instance, or even the mention or suspicion of an instance, of any language altogether without Adjectives?

H.

Though nothing of the kind should remain, it will not in the least affect my explanation nor weaken my reasoning.

F.

But, if there were such an instance; or even any traditional mention made of such a circumstance; it would very much strengthen your argument in my opinion, and more readily induce my assent.

H.

I suppose you are not so obstinately attached to Antiquity, but that a modern instance would answer the purpose as well.

F.

Any instance of the fact from sufficient authority.

H.

Then I believe I can suit you.—Doctor Jonathan Edwards, D.D., Pastor of a church in New-haven, in "Observations on the language of the MUHHEKANEEW Indians, communicated to the Connecticut Society of Arts and Sciences: published at the request of the Society, and printed by Josiah Meigs, 1788," gives us the following account.

"When I was but six years of age, my father removed with his family to Stockbridge, which at that time was inhabited by Indians almost solely. The Indians being the nearest neighbours, I constantly associated with them; their boys were my daily school-mates and play-follows. Out of my father's house, I seldom heard any language spoken beside the Indian. By these means I acquired the knowledge of that language, and a great facility in speaking it: it became more familiar to me than my mother-tongue. I knew the names of some things in Indian, which I did not know in English: even all my thoughts ran in Indian; and though the true promunciation of the language is extremely difficult to all but themselves, they acknowledged that I had acquired it perfectly; which, as they said, never had been acquired before by any Anglo-American."

After this account of himself, he proceeds,

"The language which is now the subject of Observation, is that of the Muhhekaneew, or Stockbridge Indians. They, as well as the tribe at New London, are by the Anglo-Americans called Mohegans. This language is spoken by all the Indians throughout New England. Every tribe, as that of Stockbridge, of Farmington, of New London, &c. has a different dialect; but the language is radically the same. Mr. Elliot's translation of the Bible is in a particular dialect of this language. This language appears to be much more extensive than any other language in North America. The languages of the Delawares in Pennsylvania; of the Penobscots, bordering on Nova Scotia; of the Indians of St. Francis, in Canada; of the Shawanese, on the Ohio; and of the Chippewaus, at the westward of Lake Huron; are all radically the same with the Mohegan. The same is said concerning the languages of the Ottowans, Nanticooks, Munsees, Menomonees, Messisaugas, Saukies, Ottagaumies, Killistinoes, Nipegons, Algonkins, Winnebagoes, &c. That the languages of the several tribes in New England, of the Delawares, and of Mr. Elliot's Bible, are radically the same with the Mohegan, I assert from my own knowledge."

Having thus given an account of himself, and of his knowledge of the language; of the extensiveness of this language; and of a translation of a Bible into this language; he proceeds (in page 10) to inform us, that "The Mohegans have no Adjectives in all their language. Although it may at first seem not only singular and curious, but impossible, that a language should exist without Adjectives, yet it is an indubitable fact."

CHAPTER VII.

OF PARTICIPLES.

F.

LET us proceed, if you please, to the Participle: which, you know, is so named because—"partem capit a Nomine, partem a Verbo."—"Ortum a Verbo," says Scaliger, "traxit secum tempora et significationem, adjunxitque generi et casibus."—"Ut igitur Mulus," says Vossius, "asini et equæ, unde generatur, participat indolem; ita hujus classis omnia, et nominis et verbi participant naturam: unde, et merito, Participia nominantur."

I have a strong curiosity to know how you will dispose of this Mule, (this tertium quid,) in English; where the Participle has neither Cases nor Gender; and which (if I understood you rightly some time since) you have stripped also of Time. We certainly cannot say that it is, in English,—" Pars orationis cum tempore et Casu: or,—" Vox variabilis per Casus, significans rem cum tempore." Indeed since, by your account, it takes nothing from the Verb, any more than from the Noun; its present name ought to be relinquished by us: for at all events it cannot be a PARTICIPLE in English. This however will not much trouble you: for, though Scaliger declares the PARTICIPLE to exist in language "necessitate quadam ac vi naturæ;" you, by denying it a place amongst the Parts of Speech, have decided that it is not a necessary word, and perhaps imagine that we may do as well without it.

H.

I fear you have mistaken me. I did not mean to deny the adsignification of Time to ALL the Participles; though I continue to withhold it from that which is called the Participle Present.

F.

All the Participles! Why, we have but Two in our language—The Present and the Past.

H.

We had formerly but two. But so great is the convenience and importance of this useful Abbreviation; that our authors have borrowed from other languages, and incorporated with our own, Four other Participles of equal value. We are obliged to our old translators for these new Participles. I wish they had understood what they were doing at the time: and had been taught by their wants the nature of the advantages which the learned languages had over ours. They would then perhaps have adopted the contrivance itself into our own language: instead of contenting themselves with taking individually the terms which they found they could not translate. But they proceeded in the same manner with these new Participles, as with the new Adjectives I before mentioned to you: they did not abbreviate their own language in imitation of the others; but took from other languages their abbreviations ready made. And thus again the foreigner, after having learned all our English verbs, must again have recourse to other languages in order to understand the meaning of many of our Participles.

I cannot however much blame my countrymen for the method they pursued: because the very nations who enjoyed these advantages over us, were not themselves aware of the nature of what they possessed: at least so it appears by all the accounts which they have left us of the nature of Speech; and by their distribution and definitions of the parts of which it is composed: and their posterity (the modern Greeks and the Italians) have been punished for the ignorance or carelessness of their ancestors, by the loss of great part of these advantages: which I suppose they would not have lost, had they known what they were.

As for the term PARTICIPLE, I should very willingly get rid of it: for it never was the proper denomination of this sort of word. And this improper title, I believe, led the way to its faulty definition: and both together have caused the obstinate and still unsettled disputes concerning it; and have prevented the improvement of language, in this particular, generally through the world:

The elder Stoics called this word—" Modum Verbi casualem." And in my opinion they called it well: except only that, instead of Casualem, they should have said Adjectivum; for the circumstance of its having Cases was only a consequence of its Adjection. But this small error of theirs cannot be wondered at in them, who, judging from their own transposed language, had no notion of a Noun, much less of an Adjective of any kind, without Cases.

I desire therefore, instead of PARTICIPLE, to be permitted to call this word generally a Verb adjective. And I call it by this new name, because I think it will make more easily intelligible what I conceive to be its office and nature.

This kind of word, of which we now speak, is a very useful Abbreviation: for we have the same occasion to adjective the VERB as we have to adjective the NOUN. And, by means of a distinguishing termination, not only the simple Verb itself, but every Mood, and every Tense of the verb, may be made adjective, as well as the Noun. And accordingly some languages have adjectived more, and some languages have adjectived fewer of these Moods and Tenses.

And here I must observe that the Moods and Tenses themselves are merely Abbreviations: I mean that they are nothing more than the circumstances of Manner and Time, added to the Verb in some languages by distinguishing terminations.

When it is considered that our language has made but small progress, compared either with the Greek or with the Latin (or some other languages) even in this Modal and Temporal abbreviation: (for we are forced to perform the greatest part of it by what are called Auxiliaries, il. e. separate words signifying the added circumstances;) when this is considered, it will not be wondered at, that the English, of itself, could not proceed to the next abbreviating step, viz. of adjectiving those first Abbreviations of Mood and Tense, which our language had not: and that it has therefore been obliged to borrow many of the advantages of this kind which it now enjoys, either mediately or immediately from those two first-mentioned languages. And when it is considered, that the nature of these advantages was never well understood, or at least not delivered down to us, even by those who enjoyed them; it will rather be matter of wonder that we have adopted into our language so many, than that we have not taken all.

This sort of word is therefore by no means the same with a Noun adjective (as Sanctius, Perizonius and others after them have asserted). But it is a Verb adjective. And yet what Perizonius says, is true—"Certe omnia quæ de Nomine adjectivo affirmantur, habet Participium." This is true. The Participle has all that the Noun adjective has: and for the same reason, viz. for the purpose of Adjection. But it has likewise something more than the Noun adjective has: because the Verb has something more than the Noun. And that something more, is not (as: Perizonius proceeds to assert) only the adsignification of For every Verb has a signification of its own, distinct from Manner and Time. And language has as much occasion to adjective the distinct signification of the Verb, and to adjective also the Mood, as it has 'to adjective the Time. And it has therefore accordingly adjectived all three;—the distinct signification of the simple Verb; and the Verb with its Moods; and the Verb with its Tenses. I shall at present notice only Six of these Verb adjectives which we now employ in English: viz. The simple Verb itself adjective; two Adjective Tenses; and three Adjective Moods.

Bear patiently with my new terms. I use them only by compulsion. I am chiefly anxious that my opinion may be clearly understood; and that my errors (if they are such) may plainly appear without any obscurity or ambiguity of expression: by which means even my errors may be useful.

We had formerly in English only the simple Verb Adjective: and the Past Tense Adjective. In addition to these two, we have now the convenience of four others. Which I must call,

The Potential Mood Active, Adjective;
The Potential Mood Passive, Adjective;
The Official Mood Passive, Adjective;
And The Future Tense Active, Adjective.

Still have patience with me; and, I trust, I shall finally make myself clearly understood.

And first for our simple Verb Adjective. It was formerly known in our language by the termination -and. It is now known by the termination -ing.

As the Noun Adjective always signifies all that the unadjectived Noun signifies, and no more (except the circumstance of adjection:) so must the Verb Adjective signify all that the unadjectived Verb signifies, and no more (except the circumstance of adjection.) But it has been usual to suppose that with the Indicative Mood (as it is called) is conjoined also the signification of the Present Time, and therefore to call it the Indicative Mood, Present Tense. And if it were so, then indeed the word we are now considering, besides the signification of the Verb, must likewise adsignify some Manner and the Present Time: for it would then be the Present Tense Adjective, as well as the Indicative Mood Adjective. But I deny it to be either. I deny that the Present Time (or any Time) or any Manner, is signified by that which is called (improperly) the Indicative Mood Present Tense. And therefore its proper name is merely the Verb——Indicative, if you please: i. e. Indicative merely of being a Verb.

And in this opinion (viz. that there is no adsignification of Manner or Time in that which is called the Indicative Mood: and no adsignification of Time in that which is called the Present Participle) I am neither new nor singular: for Sanctius both asserted and proved it by numerous instances in the Latin. Such as,

" Et absui proficiscens in Græciam."

Cic.

- " Sed postquam amans accessit pretium pollicens." Terent.
- " Ultro ad eam venies indicans te amare." Ibid.
- "Tum apri inter se dimicant indurantes attritu arborum costas."

 Plin.
- "Turnum fugientem hæc terra videbit."

Virg.

In the same manner we say,

- "The sun rises every day in the year."
- "Justice is at all times Mercy."
- "Truth is always one and the same from the beginning of the world to the end of it."

Neither Time nor Manner is signified by the Indicative in these sentences.

Again,-

- " The rising sun always gladdens the earth."
- " Do justice, justice being at all times Mercy."
- "My argument is of no age nor country, truth being always the same, from the beginning of the world to the end of it."

11 5

In rising and being (though called Present Participles) there is evidently here no adsignification of Time.

Scaliger saw plainly the same. He says—"Modus non fuit necessarius: unus enim tantum exigitur ob veritatem, Indicativus. Cæteri autem ob commoditatem potius."

And even Perizonius and others who maintain a contrary opinion, are compelled to acknowledge, that—" Indicativus adhibetur ad indicandam simpliciter rem ipsam."

- "Horum autem participiorum magis promiscuus aliquando est usus; tum quia nomina sunt, et sæpe adhibentur sine ullo temporis respectu aut designatione; quando scil. ejus distinctio non requiritur."
- "Hæc ipsa autem res, h. e. adsignificatio temporis, ne quis præcipuam putet, sæpissime reperitur neglecta, immo plane extincta."
- "Animadvertendum est, uno in commate sæpe diversa notari tempora, atque adeo Præsens vere Participium posse accedere omnibus omnino periodis, in quibus etiam de præterita et futura re agitur. Quia"—(Having by compulsion admitted the fact, now come the shallow and shuffling pretences) "Quia in præterita illa re, quum gesta est, Præsens Fuit: et in futura, item Præsens Erit."
- "Recurrendum denique ad illud etiam,—Præsens haberi pro extremo Præteriti temporis puncto, et primo Futuri."
- "Advenientes dicuntur, non illi tantum qui in itinere sunt, sed et qui jam pervenerunt in locum ad quem tendebant, et speciem advenientis adhuc retinent."

Præsens—quia præsens Fuit, et præsens Erit!

Præsens—extremum præteriti punctum, et primum futuri!

Advenientes-qui pervenerunt!

These shabby evasions are themselves sufficient argument against those who use them. A common termination (i.e. a coalesced word), like every other word, must always convey the same distinct meaning; and can only then be properly used, quando Distinctio requiritur. What sort of word would that be, which, (used too with propriety,) sometimes had a meaning, and sometimes had not a meaning, and sometimes a different meaning?

Thus stands the whole matter. Case, Gender, Number, are no parts of the Noun. But as these same circumstances frequently accompany the Noun, these circumstances are signified by other words expressive of these circumstances: and in some languages these words by their perpetual use have coalesced with the Noun; their separate signification has been lost sight of (except in their proper application;) and these words have been considered as mere artificial terminations of the NOUN.

So, Mood, Tense, Number, Person, are no parts of the VERB. But these same circumstances frequently accompanying the Verb, are then signified by other words expressive of these circumstances: and again, in some languages, these latter words, by their perpetual recurrence, have coalesced with the Verb; their separate signification has been lost sight of (except in their proper application;) and these words have been considered as mere artificial terminations of the VERB.

The proper application of these coalesced words, or terminations, to Nouns, has been called Declension: and to Verbs, has been called Conjugation. And perhaps this arrangement and these denominations may have greatly contributed to withdraw us from a proper consideration of this matter: for we are all very apt to rest satisfied with a name, and to inquire no further.

And thus have I given you my opinion concerning what is called the *Present Participle. Which I think improperly so called; because I take it to be merely the simple Verb adjectived, without any adsignification of Manner or Time.

F.

Now then let us proceed to the Past Participle, which you chuse to call the Past Tense Adjective.

H.

As far as relates to what is called the Indicative Mood, and consequently to its Adjective, the Participle Present; you have seen that, so far, Sanctius and I have travelled in perfect accord together. But here again I must get out at Hounslow. I cannot proceed with him to the exclusion of the other Moods and Tenses: for, in Latin, they have distinct terminations, and in English, termination and auxiliaries, signifying the circumstances of Manner and Time. Nor, consequently, can I consent to exclude the other Participles, which are indeed merely those Moods and Tenses, adjectived; and do truly therefore adsignify Manner and Time. The Manner being adjectived as well as the Time (i.e. the Mood as well as the Tense;) and both for the same reason, and with the same convenience and advantage. In our own language these

^{* [}See Additional Notes.]

Manners and Times are usually (but not always) signified by words distinct from the Verb, which we call auxiliaries. In some other languages they are signified also by words, different indeed from the Verb, but which have coalesced with the Verb, and are now considered merely as terminations; equally auxiliary however with our uncoalescing words, and used for the same purpose.

I hold then that we may and do adjective the simple Verb without adsignification of Manner or Time: that we may and do adjective the Verb in conjunction with an expressed Time: and that we may and do adjective the Verb in conjunction with an expressed Manner. I hold that all these are greatly and equally convenient for the abbreviating of speech: and that the language which has more of these conveniences does so far forth excel the language which has fewer.

The Past Participle, or the Past Tense Adjective, our language has long enjoyed: and it is obtained (as we also adjective the Noun) by adding En or Ed to the Past Tense of the verb. The Latin makes an Adjective of the Past Tense (as it also makes an Adjective of the Noun) merely by adding its Article os. n. or. to the third person of the Past Tense.

Amavit, Amavitus, Amavtus, Amatus.
Docuit, Docuitus, Docitus, Doctus.
Legit, Legitus, Legtus, Lectus.
Audivit, Audivitus, Audivtus, Auditus.

And that this Past Participle is merely the Past Tense Adjective; that it has merely the same meaning as the Past Tense, and no other; is most evident in English: because, in the same manner as we often throw one Nown change of termination to shew that it is so intended to the thrown; we are likewise accustomed to use the Fact Tense itself without any change of termination, include of this Past Participle: and the Past Tense of used, answers the purpose equally with the Parturple, and conveys the same meaning.

Dr. Lowth, who was much better acquainted with Greek and Latin than with English, and had a perfectly elegant Greek and Latin taste, finds great fault with this our English custom; calls it confusion, absurdity, and a very gross corruption; pronounces it altogether barbarous, and wholly inexcusable; and complains that it—"is too much authorized by the example of some of our best writers." He then gives instances of this inexcusable barbarism, from Shakespear, Milton, Dryden*, Clarendon, Atterbury, Prior, Swift, Addison, Misson, Bolingbroke, Pope, and Gay. And if he had been pleased to go further back than Shakespear, he might also have given instances of the same from every writer in the English tongue*. It is the idiom of the language. He is therefore undoubtedly in an error, when he says that—"This abuse has been long growing upon us, and is continually making further incroachments." For, on the contrary, the custom has greatly decreased: and as the Greek and Latin languages have become more familiar to Englishmen, and more general; our language has continually proceeded more and more to bend and incline to the rules and customs of those languages. And we have greatly benefited by those languages; and have improved our own language, by borrowing from them a more abbreviated and compact method of speech. And had our early or later authors known the nature of the benefits we were receiving; we might have benefited much more extensively.

However we shall be much to blame, if, with Dr. Lowth, we miss the advantage which our less cultivated language affords us by its defects: for by those very defects it will assist us much to discover the nature of human speech, by a comparison of our own language with more cultivated languages. And this it does eminently in the present instances of the Past Participle and the Noun Adjective.

WELL. Now for your four Abbreviations: which, you say, we have adopted from those other languages.

H.

That which I call the Potential Passive Adjective is that which our antient writers first adopted; and which we have since taken in the greatest abundance: not led to it by any reasoning, or by any knowledge of the nature of the words; but by their great practical convenience and usefulness. I mean such words as the following, whose common termination has one common meaning.

Admissible	Incorrigible	Formidable
Affable	Incredible	Fusible
Ineffable	Culpable	Heritable
Inaccessible	Despicable	Impregnable
Amiable	Indivisible	Indefatigable
Arable	Indubitable	Indefeisible
Audible	Eligible	Indelible
Cognizable	Inexplicable	Inadmissible
Incombustible	Infallible	Inevitable
Incompatible	Feasible	Immiscible
Contemptible	Inflexible	Inimitable

Inexorable	Noble	Vendible ·
Inexpugnable	Palpable	Visible

Liable	Tangible	Facile,
Malleable	Tenable	&c.
Incommensurable	Intolerable
Immutable	Tractable	•

These words, and such as these, our early authors could not possibly translate into English, but by a periphrasis. They therefore took the words themselves as they found them: and the same practice, for the same reason, being followed by their successors; the frequent repetition of these words has at length naturalized them in our language. But they who first introduced these words, thought it necessary to explain them to their readers: and accordingly we find in your manuscript New Testament, which (whoever was the Translator) I suppose to have been written about the reign of Edward the third*; in that manuscript we find an explanation

^{*} I suppose it to be about this date; amongst other reasons, because it retains the Anglo-Saxon Theta, the ambiguous g, and the 1 without a point over it. But I am not sufficiently conversant with Manuscripts to say when the use of these characters ceased.

accompanying the words of this sort which are used in it. And this circumstance sufficiently informs us, that the adoption was at that time but newly introduced.

Gower, in his Conf. Amant. (written, as he informs us, in the sixteenth year of Richard the second) has taken very little advantage of this then newly introduced abbreviation. He uses only six of these words, viz. Credible, Excusable, Impossible, Incurable, Invisible, Noble; and one, made by himself, I believe, in imitation, Chace able.

"She toke hir all to venerie,
In foreste and in wildernesse,
For there was all hir besinesse
By daie, and eke by nightes tide,
With arowes brode under the side,
And bow in honde, of whiche she slough
And toke all that hir lyst enough
Of beastes whiche ben CHACEABLE."

Gower, lib. 5. fol. 90. pag. 2. col. 1.

Chaucer uses many more of these words than Gower did; but in nothing like such quantities as have been since employed in our language.

F.

I understand you then to say that the words in our language with the termination BLE, are merely the Potential Passive Adjective: and that we have adopted this termination from the Latin, for the purpose of abbreviation. But the Latin Grammarians had no such notion of this termination. They have assigned no separate office, nor station, nor title, to this kind of word. They have not ranked it even amongst their participles. They call these words merely Verbalia in Bilis: which title barely informs us, that they have indeed something or other to do with the verbs; but what that something is, they have not told us. Indeed they are so uncertain concerning the relation which these words bear to the verb; that most of the grammarians, Vossius, Perizonius, Goclenius, and others, tell us, that these Verbalia in Bilis signify sometimes passively and sometimes actively. And I am sure we use great numbers of words with this termination in English, which do not appear to signify either actively or passively.

Vossius says—"Hujusmodi verbalia sæpius exponuntur passive, interdum et active."

Perizonius—"Porro sunt et alia unius formæ vocabula, duplicem tamen, tum activam, tum passivam habentia significationem; veluti Adjectiva in Bilis exeuntia. De quorum passiva significatione nullum est dubium. De activa, hæc exempli loco habe, &c."

And I think I could, without much trouble, furnish you with a larger catalogue of words in Ble, used in English, without a passive signification; than you have furnished of those with a passive signification.

What say you to such as these?

Abominable	Convenable	Miserable
Accordable	Culpable	Pleasurable
Agreeable	Customable	Profitable
Amicable	Delectable	Proportionable
Available	Discordable	Reasonable
Capable	Durable	Risible
Charitable	Entendable	Semblable
Colourable*	Favourable	Vengeable
Comfortable	Forcible	Veritable
Concordable	Honourable	&c.
Conducible	Inclinable

^{* [}They may have now a COLORABLE pretence to withstand such innovations." Spenser's View of the State of Ireland.

Todd's edit. 1805. pag. 310.]

And the French have a multitude besides, such as secourable, &c. which we have not adopted from them.

H.

All this is very true. But what says Scaliger of these Verbals in Bilis?—"Recentiores audacter nimis jam actus significationem attribuere, idque frivolis sane argumentis. Auxere errorem pertinacia. Poetica licentia dictum est, Penetrabile active."—De Causis, lib. 4. cap. 98.

Scaliger speaks of their frivolous arguments; but I have never yet seen any attempt at any argument whatever on the subject. They bring some examples indeed of an active use of some words in Bilis. From good authors they are very few indeed: from Virgil one word; two from Terence; one from Livy; one from Tacitus; one from Quintus Curtius; one from Valerius Maximus: they produce abundance from Plautus, who used such words as voluptabilis, ignorabilis, &c. And after the Latin language became corrupted; in its decay, we meet with heaps of them. It is in the terminations chiefly that languages become corrupted: and I suppose the corruption arises from not having settled or well understood the meaning and purpose of those terminations.

Had the Latin Grammarians been contented with the old Stoic definition of Modus verbi casualis, these verbals might very well have been ranked with their participles: but when they defined the participle to be a word significans cum tempore, these verbals were necessarily excluded: and to retain the participle present, as they called it, they were compelled obstinately, against all reason and evidence, to maintain that there was a signification of Time, both in the Indicative and in its Adjective the present participle; although there was no termination or word added to the Indicative of the verb, by which any Time could be signified. With equal reason might they contend, that the same word with the termination Bilis, was properly used to signify indifferently two almost opposite ideas; viz. To Feel, or, To be Felt; To Beat, or, To be Beaten: which would be just as rational, as that the same word should be purposely employed in speech, to signify equally the horse which is ridden, and the man who rides him. Words may undoubtedly, at some times and by some persons, be so abused: and too frequently they are so abused. And when any word or termination becomes generally so abused, it becomes useless; and in fact ceases to be a word: for that is not a word, whose signification is unknown. A few of these corruptions may be borne in a language, and the context of the sentence may assist the hearer to comprehend the speaker's meaning; but when the bulk of these terminations in a language becomes generally so corrupted, that language is soon broken up and lost: and, to supply the place of these corrupted words or terminations, men are forced to have recourse again to other words or terminations which may convey distinct meanings to the hearer.

Scaliger, distinguishing properly between Ilis (he should have said Bilis; for the B is important to this termination) and Ivus, instances a similar distinction and convenience in the Greek language, viz. ausbyrov and auobserve. And this instance ought to make an Englishman blush for his countrymen; whose ignorance commonly employs the corresponding word to authror, sensible, in three different meanings; although (thanks to our old translators) we have now in our language, three distinct 2 I terminations for the purpose of distinction: We have Senseful*; —Sensitive; —Sensible; —Sensevole; —Sensitive; -Sensibile; -Full of Sense; -which can feel; -which may be felt. Yet it is not very uncommon to hear persons talk of—"A Sensible man, who is very Sensible of the cold, and of any Sensible change in the weather †."----

I wish this were a solitary instance in our language; but this abuse, like the corrupt influence of the crown,

* ["Whylest thus he talkt, the knight with greedy eare Hong still upon his melting mouth attent: Whose SENSEFULL words empierst his hart so neare, That he was wrapt with double ravishment."

Faerie Queene, book 6. cant. 9. st. 26.]

(in the language of parliament twenty years ago) has increased, is increasing, and ought to be diminished. Much of this abuse in our speech we owe to the French: whom however it would be ungrateful in us to reproach with it; because I believe we owe likewise to these same French all the benefit of all these abbreviations which we have borrowed: for though it is true that they proceed originally from the Latin; yet we have them mediately through the Italian and the French. And we ought to be contented, as the French also ought with their revolution, to take the good and the bad together. Especially if, as in both cases, the good preponderates beyond all comparison over the bad: And more especially still, if we may retain the benefit, and avoid the future mischief.

The words in Ble which you have opposed to me, we have taken from the French, who took them corruptly from the Italian. And it happened in this manner. Our Anglo-Saxon Full, which with the Germans is Vol, became the Italian Vole: and there was something in the sound of Vole so pleasing to an Italian ear; that many of their authors (led by their ears and not by their understanding, without any occasion for it, deciding on its propriety by the sound and not by the signification) added it as a termination to many of their words; not only where the signification suited, but often where it did not: and, amongst others, Cardinal Bembo in particular is much and justly ridiculed, for his very injudicious and wholesale application of this termination*.

^{* &}quot;A fin de ne rien laisser en arriere, tant qu'il me sera possible, je leur repondray a ce en quoy ils semblent avoir quelque couleur de pretendre leur langue avoir de la gentillesse que la nostre n'ha point. Ils disent donc qu'ils ont quelques terminaisons de

Hence the Italian words,

Abominevole Memorevole Colpevole Accordevole Costumevole Piacevole Profittevole Aggradevole Dilettevole Amichevole Discordevole Proporzionevole. Durevole Ragionevole Capevole Caritatevole Inchinevole Ridevole Colorevole Intendevole Sembievole : Conducevole Valevole Favorevole Forzevole Confortevole Vendichevole Concordevole Onorevole Veritevole Miserevole Covenevole Soccorevole, &c.

Which the French by a most slovenly pronunciation, not distinguishing between Bile and Vole, have transformed into—Abominable, Agréable, Amicable, Capable,

Noms fort plaisantes et gentiles, desquelles nous sommes destituez. Et la principale de celles qu'ils mettent en avant, c'est des mots qui finissent en Ole: comme Piacevole, Favorevole. le confesse que ceste terminaison est belle: mais je di qu'une chose belle perd sa grace quand on en abuse. Or qu'ainsi soit que quelques uns en abusent, il appert par la controverse qui est entre eux touchant le mot Capevole, et quelques autres. Car tous reçoivent bien Favorevole, Piacevole, Amorevole, Laudevole, Honorevole, Biasquevole, Solazzevole, et plusieurs semblables: mais quant a Capevole, et quelques autres, ils ne sont pas reçeus de tous. Car aucuns disent qu'en ce mot Capevole on abuse de ceste terminaison Ole, et qu'il faut dire Capace. Or quant a Capevole je sçay bien que leur Bembo en use au premier livre du traittée intitulé Le Prose. Mais on peut dire qu'il ne s'en faut pas fier a luy: pource qu'il usoit tant des mots ayans ceste terminaison qu'il s'en rendoit ridicule.

"Or est il certain que comme Bembo usoit trop de ces mots, de sorte qu'il rendoit leur beauté ennuyeuse, et luy faisoit perdre sa grace; quelques autres aussi ont faict, et aucuns encore aujourdhuy font le mesme."—Henry Estiene, De la precellence, &c. pag. 54..

Charitable, Confortable, Convenable, Coupable, Delectable, Durable, Favorable, Forcible, Honorable, Miserable, Memorable, Profitable, Proportionable, Raisonable, Risible, Semblable, Valable, Vengeable, Veritable, Secourable, &c.

In this manner our own word Full, (passing though the German, the Italian, and the French,) comes back to us again under the corrupt shape of Ble: and in that shape to the great annoyance of its original owners: for it tends to confound those terminations, whose distinct application and employment are so important to the different and distinct purposes of speech.

Besides these corruptions of Vole, we have many other corrupt terminations in Ble, which are blemishes in the language; and which I am persuaded would not have happened to it, had the Verbals in Bilis, their nature, their proper use, and their great advantage been previously understood. Duplum, Triplum, Humile, Tabula, Fabula, Rabula, Syllaba, Parabola, Biblium, Quidlibet, Vestibulum, Ambulare, Dissimulare, Scribillare, Tremulare, &c. &c. Tuimelen, Grommelen, Kruimelen, Rommelen, Fommelen, Mompelen, Kabel, Bobbel, Stoppel, &c. &c. would never have been corrupted by us to—Double, Treble, Humble, Table, Fable, Rabble, Syllable, Parable, Bible, Quibble, Vestible, Amble, Dissemble, Scribble, Tremble, &c. Tumble, Grumble, Crumble, Rumble, Fumble, Mumble, Cable, Bubble, Stubble, &c. &c. But, as B. Jonson did well write the word Syllabe, and not Syllable; so we should have taken care to give to all the other words, terminations which would not have interfered with this important abbreviation. We should never have seen such monsters in our language, as Shapeable, Sizeable, Companionable, Personable*, Chanceable, Accustomable, Merciable, Behoveable, &c. which disgrace the writings of some otherwise very excellent authors.

F.

Do you then propose to reform these abuses?

H.

Reform! God forbid. I tremble at the very name of Reform. The Scotch and the English lawyer in conjunction, [Dundas] and [Pitt,] with both the Indies in their patronage, point to the Ecce Homo with a sneer; and insultingly bid us—" Behold the fate of a Reformer!"

No. With our eyes open to the condition of them all, you know that your friend Bosville and I have entered into a strict engagement to belong for ever to the established government, to the established church, and to the established language of our country: because they are established. Establish what you please: Do but establish; and, whilst that establishment shall last, we shall be perfectly convinced of its propriety.

No. I shall venture no further than to explain the nature and convenience of these abbreviations. And I venture so far, only because our religious and devout [Houses of Parliament] have not yet passed an act to restrain me individually to the Liturgy (as a sort of half-sacrament) and to forbid my meddling with any words out of it.

^{* [&}quot; And in her feigning fancie did pourtray

Faerie Queene, book 3. cant. 4. st. 5.]

^{[&}quot; More TUNEABLE than lark to shepherd's ear."

F.

However fearful and backward you may be, or pretend to be, upon the occasion, I do not think a slow reform either dangerous or difficult or unlikely in this particular. Your principle is simple and incontestable:—One word or one termination should be used with one signification and for one purpose*.

By the importation of Ble or Able into the language, we have gained a manifest advantage. Indeed this termination, because eminently useful, has become so familiar even to the most illiterate of our countrymen; that by the force of analogy alone, they frequently apply it (and with perfect propriety too, as to its signification) to words originally English. A custom however which, though useful, is not hitherto approved by authors of credit: although some of them too have sometimes given it the sanction of their example. Thus Chillingworth does not disdain to use Knowable, Understandable, Bearable, &c. Many others of our best authors have done the same. But, however great the authority which sanctions some of these applications of this termination, the practice has never been received into approved usage: which yet, I think, it might be universally, and with advantage to the language.

I'think too that we might, gently and by degrees, get rid of most of those words where the termination Ble is corruptly and improperly employed. For the word Peaceable, for instance, we have not the least occasion; Peaceful being altogether as familiar to us. Deceivable, Delectable, and Medicinable have already given way to Deceitful, Delightful, and Medicinal. Vengeful and Forceful* are perpetually used by Dryden; which will justify us for the banishment of Vengeable and Forcible. For Biasmevole and Laudevole, (Blameable and Laudable,) Drayton, without any aukwardness, uses Blameful and Praiseful*. I cannot think that Chanceful, Changeful† Valueful, &c. would be received with much difficulty in the place of Chanceable, Changeable, Valuable, &c. Indeed, generally speaking, wherever the Italians have applied Vole with propriety to their words, we may commonly exchange Ble for Ful. I know not indeed what to do with many of those words we have received from them, where the Italians themselves applied Vole improperly. For Amichevole, however, (Amicable) we might say Friendly: for Sociable and Reasonable; Social, Rational: for Solvable and Colourable; Solvent and Apparent. But I fear there are between twenty and thirty of them, which the united efforts of all our best authors (if authors could ever be united) would not be able to get rid of in a century.

The other corruptions in Ble which you have mentioned, such as Dissemble*, Vestible, &c. we might write as they were formerly written, Dissimule, Vestibule, &c. And as for those obstinate corruptions which could not, from their constant, familiar and inveterate use, be driven from their usurped stations; the use of them should be avoided as much as possible; they would then be noticed by the meanest etymologists, and would cause no equivocation, mistake nor doubt, though they were not (as they ought to be) written with their original terminations.

H.

Take notice, I am not a partner in your proposal. The corruption of most of these words is now so inveterate, that those authors must be very hardy indeed who would risque the ridicule of the innovation: and their numbers and merit must be great to succeed in any reformation of the language: or in any other reformation in England, if Reason and Truth are the only bribes they have to offer.

F.

What is the termination of your Potential Active Adjective?

H.

We have two terminations in English for this purpose:

^{* &}quot;The vayne and DISSYMULED sorowe that Fredegund made for the kynge."—Fabyan, parte 1. fol. 52. pag. 2. col. 1.

which is one more than enough. And yet our language has not hitherto availed itself of this useful abbreviation so extensively as it ought to have done. It is by no means familiar or in common use, as the Potential Passive Adjective is; but is chiefly, though not intirely, confined to technical expressions.

For this double termination we are obliged both to the Greek and to the Roman language.

"Duas habuere apud Latinos, (says Scaliger) totidem apud Græcos terminationes; in Ivus, activam, in Ilis, passivam. Sic Græci ausbruxor, quod sensu præditum est; ausbruror, quod sensu percipi potest."

We now employ both these abbreviations in English; as Sensible, Sensitive, &c. Of the former abbreviation we have already spoken.

At the dawn of learning in this country, those who became acquainted with the Latin and French authors, perceived (and especially when they came to translate them or to repeat any thing after them) a convenient short method of expression in those languages, with which their own could not furnish them. Finding therefore this peculiarity, and not knowing whence it arose; as they proceeded to be more familiar with those languages, they borrowed the whole Latin or French words in which the abbreviation they wanted was contained: instead of using their own periphrastic idiom as formerly, or forming (as they should have done) a correspondent abbreviation in words of their own language. And thus, by incorporating those words, they obtained partially (for it extended no further than the very words adopted) that sort of abbreviation to our language which it had not before.

Wilkins was well aware of the benefit of this method of speech, and proposed to give this advantage to his Philosophical Language, by the means of a Transcendental particle; though he thought it concerned chiefly the copiousness and elegancy of a language, and mentions its use in the "abbreviating of language" only as a secondary consideration. He likewise saw plainly that the manner in which instituted languages originally obtained this end, was by-" such a kind of composition as doth alter the terminations of words."——He knew too by his own experience (for he was forced to coin them) that "we have not actually such variety of words" as he wanted: and he declared it to proceed from "the defect of language." He should have said our language, and not language in general: for though it is true of our language, it is not true of the Latin nor of the Greek. For "that kind of composition which alters the terminations of words" being nothing more than the addition of a word; and the addition which the Romans and Greeks made for this purpose, being a word of their own language, whose Force was consequently known to them; they could, upon occasion, add it to any verb they pleased, and its signification would be evident to all. For, though ισχυς and Vis by frequent use and repetition were corrupted and became in composition usos and ivus in this abbreviation; yet the analogy which this termination would bear to the other words of the same sort, would justify the application of the same termination to any word where they might chuse to employ it. But that is not the case with us: for, as we have not obtained this abbreviation by "that kind of composition which alters the terminations of words" (i. e. by adding to one known word of our own, another known word of our own, expressive of the added circumstance;) but only by adopting some of the abbreviated words themselves from other languages, we cannot so easily supply our defects and extend the advantage: unless we go on borrowing fresh abbreviated words, ready made to our hands, from the same sources.

And this will appear plainly to any one who will please to examine our language: for we have not one single word of Anglo-Saxon origin, whose Potential Mood Active is Adjectived. Some attempts indeed have been made towards it, but without success: for Wilkins's "vnwalkative" (for-one who cannot walk,) and other words of the same coinage, have never passed current amongst us. And it is well for the language that they have not, and that the greater part of these new-coined words has been rejected: because the persons who coined them being commonly affected, and always ignorant of the force of the termination they employed, would very greatly have injured and confounded the language by an improper application of the termination. As Wilkins himself did, when he barbarously applied it to the Noun QUANTITY; and talked of "Quantitative pronouns," &c. Had this word succeeded, we should soon have had Quidditative in our language too; and then the metaphysician would have triumphed over the last remains of common sense amongst us, and would exultingly have told us, that—" Essentia est primus rerum conceptus constitutivus vel quidditativus; cujus ope cætera, quæ de re aliqua dicuntur, demonstrari possunt."

All the abbreviations which we enjoy of this kind, (i. e. the Potential Active Adjective) are either borrowed from the Latin, and then they terminate in Ive; as Purgative, Vomitive, Operative, &c. or they are borrowed from the Greek, and then they terminate in Ic; as Cathartic, Emetic, Energetic, &c.

Hence we have at length (for it was not done all at once, but by slow degrees,) adopted into our language such words as the following;

From the Latin—Aperitive, Ablative, Crescive, Coercive, Consecutive, Dative, Detersive, Desiccative, Expletive, Eruptive, Genitive, Inceptive, Imperative, Intellective, Inchoative, Laxative, Lucrative, Lenitive, Negative, Nuncupative, Optative, Passive, Progressive, Prerogative, Responsive, Solutive, Sanative, Sensitive, Susceptive, Transitive, Vocative, Visive, &c. &c.

From the Greek—Analytic, Apologetic, Caustic, Characteristic, Cathartic, Cryptic, Critic, Cosmetic, Dialectic, Didactic, Diuretic, Despotic, Drastic, Elastic, Emetic, Energetic, Fantastic, Gymnastic, Hypothetic, Narcotic, Paralytic, Peripatetic, Periphrastic, Prognostic, Prophylactic, Plastic, Pathetic, Prophetic, Syllogistic, Styptic, Sceptic, Synthetic, Sympathetic, &c.

I have here mentioned only some of the most common words of this sort, and those where we have borrowed only the abbreviation, without taking also into our language the same unabbreviated verb: by which may appear more plainly the reason of the adoption.

F.

I see the use and convenience of this abbreviation, which resembles the former. And I perceive too that you thereby gain an explanation of some more abstract Nouns. A Critic is (some one, any one) who can discern.

A Provocative, a Palliative, a Motive is (something, any thing) whatever may provoke, may palliate, may move. So an Invective, an Incentive, &c. But this explanation will not serve for a Missive, or a Relative.

H.

It will not serve for corruptions. And wherever it will not serve, we may be sure that the terminations are corruptly and improperly applied. The French have abused these terminations in a most immoderate degree; whose corruptions of this abbreviation we have but partially followed. Missive (in this use of it) is an old French corruption, adopted by Shakespear and others*, and even by Dryden, who uses it for Missile (i. e. Missibile); but I think it is no longer current in English. So Imaginative and Opinionative have formerly been used by Bacon and others; but are no longer in approved use with us. Relative has indeed, within my memory, by a ridiculous affectation of false and unfounded accuracy, crept forward into improper use, to the exclusion of Relation. Certain precise gentlemen will no longer permit us to call our kindred our Relations: No, but—our Relatives. Why? What is the meaning of the termination On, and the meaning of the termination Ive, which qualifies the one, and disqualifies the other? They have both appropriate meanings: without the knowledge of which how can these gentlemen determine their proper use? If they say, they have not appropriate meanings; by what rule do they prefer the one to the other? They who do not take what they find in use, but propose a change, are bound to give a reason for it. But, I believe, they will be as little able to justify their innovation, as Sir Thomas More would have been to explain the foundation of his ridiculous distinction between NAY and No, and between YEA and YES*.

^{* &}quot; I woulde not here note by the way, that Tyndal here trans-: lateth NO for NAY: for it is but a trifle and mistaking of the En- / glishe word: sauing that ye shoulde see that he, whych in two so ... plain Englishe wordes, and so commen as is NAYE and NO, can not tell when he should take the tone, and when the tother, is not, ... for translating into Englishe, a man very mete.

[&]quot;For the use of those two wordes in aunswering to a question; is this. NO aunswereth the question framed by the affirmative. As for ensample; If a manne should aske Tindall hymselfe,—Ys. an heretike mete to translate Holy Scripture into Englishe? Lo. to thys question, if he will aunswere trew Englishe, he muste aunswere NAY, and not NO.

[&]quot;But and if the question be asked hym thus lo:—Is not an heretique mete to translate Holy Scripture into English? To this

But these petty fopperies will pass away of themselves, and when the whim is over, we shall all find our Relations again as safe and sound as ever.

There certainly are many other corrupt applications of Ive, and some few of Ic. But we may avoid the detail; for they are all easily curable: and, I fear, I may be thought to have already dwelt too tediously on particular words and instances.

F.

The Greek and the Latin then, it appears, have both these same abbreviations by means of terminations. And the Latin, being originally Greek, must be supposed to have received them from the Greek. Accordingly Scaliger, has told us that the Greek was became the Latin Ivus, by the insertion of the Æolic digamma. But he has not shewn, question lo, if he wil aunswer true English, he must aunswere NO, and not NAY.

[&]quot;And a lyke difference is there betwene these two aduerbes, YE and YES. For if the question bee framed unto Tindall by the affirmative in thys fashion:—If an heretique falsely translate the Newe Testament into Englishe, to make hys false heresyes seeme the worde of Godde; be hys bookes worthy to be burned? To this question, asked in thys wyse, yf he wil aunswere true Englishe, he must aunswere YE, and not YES.

[&]quot;But nowe if the question be asked hym thus lo by the negative:—If an heretike falsely translate the Newe Testament into Englishe, to make hys false heresyes seme the Word of God; be not his bokes well worthy to be burned? To thys question in thys fashion framed, if he wyll aunswere trew Englishe, he may not aunswere YE, but he must aunswere YES; and say, YES mary be they, bothe the translation and the translatour, and all that wyll holde wyth them."—Sir T. More's Workes: Confutacion of Tyndale, pag. 448.

and I cannot discover, whence the Latin has its termination Bilis. In $\alpha i\sigma \theta \eta \tau$ -ino, and sensit-ivus, there is sufficient similarity in the terminations to admit of Scaliger's supposition. But in $\alpha i\sigma \theta \eta \tau$ -o, and sensi-bilis, where is the similarity? Whence then had the Romans this latter termination of Bilis? Surely not from the Greek.

H.

Whatever the Latin has not from the Greek, it has from the Goth. And this runs throughout the whole of the language. I do not assert however, but I say I believe, that the termination of the Latin Potential Passive Adjective is the Anglo-Saxon or Gothic Abal, Robur. And this is also our English word Able; which has nothing to do with Habilis, whence our etymologists erroneously derive it: for there is no agreement whatever of signification, though there is a resemblance of sound, between Habilis and Able. And Junius upon this word says truly—"Anglos vero vocabulum Able non debere abnepotibus Romuli, planum statim fiet inspicientibus locum Cædmonis, 12. 25. ubi Diabolo primos nostros parentes tentanti hæc verba tribuit:

Loo her me. on Syrne ris rapan.
her sæt su sirrer. oræter æte.
cpæs sat sin a bal and cpært. and sin mod fera.
mana punde." &c.

[Deus voluit me iter hoc ingredi, jussit ut fructum hunc comederes; dixit ingenii tui impetum, et scientiam, ipsumque adeo mentis tuæ intellectum auctiorem fore." &c.]

F.

We have still two other of your abbreviations to ex amine. What you mean by Future Tense Adjective I can easily understand. You mean only what we are accustomed to call the Future Participle. But of your Official Mood I have no notion whatever; having never heard of any such thing before.

H.

No. Nor, if I could have found any better title for it, should you have heard it now. I do not like it myself; but I am driven to it by distress. I want a term for that Mood or Manner of using the verb, by which we might couple the notion of duty with it; by which we might, at the same time and in conjunction with it, express ra deerra, the things which ought to be done and the things which ought not to be done. Observe, if you please, that I am not the first in calling this a Mood of the verb. The most antient Grammarians did assign such a Mood to the verb: and they termed it Modum participialem. But this term will by no means suit our language: for, having no cases, we can have no participles. The term is besides inadequate and faulty in other respects; which I forbear to mention, that we may not be involved in that fruitless and endless contention concerning Gerunds and the Participle in Dus &c. which relates not to our language; and in which the combatants have fought by citations from different authors, and not by any arguments drawn from the nature of speech, or the use and convenience of words in the communication of our thoughts.

Indeed, for any benefit that our language has hitherto received by these two latter abbreviations, I might well have forborne to mention them. But I speak of them, not as possessing them, but as important instruments which we should have in our language, and may have if we please. We stand in great need of them; and our authors have only to reach out their hands and gather them: they are abundant enough in the Latin.

The words of this sort, which we have hitherto adopted, are barely these—legend, reverend, dividend, prebend, memorandum. We can hardly be said to have adopted deodand, multiplicand, subtrahend, and credenda*; i. e. Which ought to be given to God, Which ought to be multiplied, Which ought to be subtracted, Which ought to be believed.

The first of these, LEGEND, which means—That which ought to be read—is, from the early misapplication of the term by impostors, now used by us as if it meant—That which ought to be laughed at. And so it is explained in our dictionaries.

How soon REVEREND—i. e. Which ought to be revered, —will be in the same condition, though now with great propriety applied to our judges and our clergy, I pretend not to determine. It will depend upon themselves. But if ever a time shall arrive when, through abject servility and greediness, they become distinguished as the principal instruments of pillage and oppression; it is not the mitre and the coif, nor the cant of either of them, that will prevent REVEREND from becoming like LEGEND, a term of the utmost reproach and contempt.

DIVIDEND—That which ought to be divided—is perpetually abused: whilst each man calls the share of the DIVIDEND which he has received, his DIVIDEND; though he means to keep it all to himself.

^{*[&}quot;Agenda, and Credenda." See Encyclopedia Britannica.]

PREBEND—Res præbenda—is now commonly applied to the person receiving it, and not to—That which ought to be afforded to him.

Memorandum alone stands clear from abuse, and free from dauger.—That which ought to be remembered.

F.

I perceive that we cannot, without this Official Passive Adjective, have such Substantives as a legend, a dividend, a prebend, and a memorandum; a deodand, a multiplicand, a subtrahend; but, in other respects, we have a method of expressing the same thing. Do we not say—This book is to be read with attention: That man is to be revered for his integrity: The revenue is not to be divided amongst thieves: Support is to be afforded to the worthy: That circumstance is to be remembered?

H.

Yes truly, we have such a method; but we have no great reason to be proud of it: for nothing can be more aukward and ambiguous. The use of such a method of speech could only arise from our want of these three abbreviations, viz. the Potential Passive Adjective, the Official Passive Adjective, and the Future Tense Adjective: for this expression—Is to, or Is to be—is all that we have to supply the place of each of those three*.

The following passage of Boethius, lib. 1. prosa 3.

" Quod si nec Anaxagoræ fugam, nec Socratis venenum, nec

^{* [}See the Notes, Vol. I., p. 450, 451, where the passage from Boethius has been already given. See also a NOTE on the Anglo-Saxon Derivative or Future Infinitive, and Present Participle, subjoined to the EDITOR'S PREFACE.—ED.]

Zenonis tormenta, quoniam sunt peregrina, novisti; at Canios, at Senecas, at Soranos, quorum nec pervetusta nec incelebris memoria est, scire potuisti. "Their talents were of a peculiar kind and blended with a considerable alloy of eccentricity.") Itaque nihil est quod admirere, si in hoc vitæ salo circumflantibus agitemur procellis, quibus hoc maxime propositum est, pessimis displicere. Quorum quidem tametsi est numerosus exercitus, SPERNENDUS tamen est; quoniam nullo duce regitur, sed errore tantum temere ac passim lymphante raptatur:"

is thus translated by Chaucer, fol. 222. p. 1. col. I.

"So if thou haste not knowen the exilynge of Anaxagoras, ne the empoysoning of Socrates, ne the turmentes of Zeno, for they weren straungers, yet mightest thou have knowen the Senecas, the Canios, and the Soranos: of whiche folke the renome is neyther ouer olde ne unsolempne. The whiche men nothyng els ne brought to the deth, but only for they were enformed of my maners, and semeden most unlyke to the studies of wicked folke. And for thy thou oughtest nat to wondren, though that I in the bitter see be driven with tempestes blowing aboute. In the which thys is my moste purpose, that is to sayne, to displesen wicked men. Of whiche shrewes al be the hooste neuer so great, It is to dispise; for it is not governed with no leader of reason, but it is rauyshed onely by fletynge erroure folily and lightlye."

The following from Virgil,

"INFANDUM, regina, jubes renovare dolorem," is thus translated by Douglas,

"—— Thy desir, lady, is Renewing of Untellybil sorow, I wys."

This was not the bishop's fault, but the penury of the language. Untellybil means—What cannot be uttered. But Virgil would not say Ineffabile, when Æneas immediately proceeds to tell the tale; but he says Infandum, —That which ought not to be uttered: which yet, to oblige the queen, he proceeds to tell.

Dryden has endeavoured to avoid the word which the language would not permit him to translate:

"Great queen, what you command me to relate, Renews the sad remembrance of our fate."

In the Old Batchelor, when Nol Bluffe had been kicked, he says, (act 3. sc. 9.)

"Bluff. By heav'n, 'tis not to be put up.

Sir Jo. What, bully?

Bluff. The affront.

Sir Jo. No, agad, no more 'tis; for that's put up already."

Is not to be put up, or, Is not to be borne, may equally mean either Intolerabile, or Intolerandum, or Intoleraturum: That which cannot be borne, or That which ought not to be borne, or That which will not be borne hereafter. Bluff meant either Intolerabile or Intolerandum; but Sir Joseph agrees with Bluff in the sense of Intoleraturum, because the kicking was not a matter de futuro, but already past.

F.

I see it. The jest is owing to the penury of our language, which gives room for the equivocation.

But if we are so scantily provided with words of this Official Passive Adjective; we are still worse off respecting the Future Tense Adjective: for I cannot recollect a single instance of it in English, except this solitary word Future.

H.

Yes, one more; Venture or Adventure. Which, though it appears as a substantive, means merely (any thing, something, aliquid) Venturum. I am not sure that Judicature and Legislature* were not originally used in the language with propriety.

It is a reproach to the English and the French philosophers, that both their languages should still want these two most useful abbreviations. And it is the more reproachful, because the reason is obvious. We want them; because the French (whom we have copied) are without them:—and the French have them not; because the Italians (whom the French copied), by ignorance and carelessness, and by confounding their own terminations, had lost the benefit of these abbreviations. Surely either our arms are now long enough to reach across those languages and snatch them at once immediately from the Latin; or our sober ingenuity bold enough to form them for ourselves in our own language by a discreet and well weighed imitation. Can any thing be more lame and aukward than our—About to be, and About to come, and About to do, &c.? Or our equivocal—Is to be, and Is to come, and Is to do, &c. for Futurus, Venturus, Facturus, &c.?

If custom and habit may, in some measure, have blinded us to the inadequacy of these expressions; we cannot avoid perceiving plainly their deformity, when we notice how our old translators first struggled to express this Future abbreviation, and to what shift they were driven.

"Generacious of eddris, who shewide to you to fle fro wraththe to comynge?"—Matt. cap. 3. ver. 7.

^{* [}Legem ferre, or rogare, was, amongst the Romans, to propose a law. Legem sciscere, was the act of the people, i.e. to give their consent and authority to the law proposed.

"Sotheli there the ship was to puttyng out the charge."

Ibid. cap. 21. Ver. 3.

See p. 450. Vol. I.; and the NOTES subjoined to the EDITOR'S PREFACE.—ED.]

^{* [}This mode of expression seems to be the representative of the Anglo-Saxon Future Infinitive; thus in Matt. 11. 3. &c., for Wycliffe's "thou that art to comynge" we have in the Saxon "pu be to cumenne eapt:" if so, it was no shift of the translators, but an ancient form in common use.

- "Centurioun wents to the tribune and tolde to hym, seginge, what art thou to doynge? forsothe this man is a citeseyn romayn."

 Ibid. cap. 22. ver. 26.
- "Anoon thei that weren to tormentinge him, departeden awey from hym."—Ibid. ver. 29.
- "Sum of the Iewis gaderiden hem, and maden a vow, seignge hem nether to etynge nether drinkynge, til thei slowen Poul."

 Ibid. cap. 23. ver. 12.
- "I gesse me blessid at thee, whanne I am to defendynge me this day, moost thee wytynge alle thingis that ben at Iewis."

 1bid. cap. 26. ver. 2, 3.
- "Drede thou nothing of these whiche thou art to suffrynge: lo the deuel is to sendynge sume of you in to prisoun."

Apocal. cap. 2. ver. 10,

"The dragon stode bifore the womman that was to beringe child; that whanne she hadde born child, he shulde deuoure hir sone."—Apocal. cap. 12. ver. 4.

The aukwardness of the above substitutions for the Future Participle (or Future Tense Adjective) will not, I believe, be disputed. I leave you to compare them with the more modern successive versions of the same passages, and I think you will find the latter equally inadequate.

Now in regard to all these which I have mentioned, and many other abbreviations which I have not yet mentioned; our modern English authors (not being aware of what the language had gained) have been much divided in their opinions; whether we should praise or censure those who, by adopting a great number of foreign words and incorporating them into the old Anglo-Saxon language, have by degrees produced the modern English. Whilst some have called this Enriching, others have called it Deforming the original language of our angestors: which these latter affirm to have been sufficiently adapted to composition to have expressed with equal advantage, propriety and precision, by words from its own source, all that we can now do by our foreign helps. But in their declamations (for they cannot be called arguments) on this subject, it is evident that, on both sides, they confined themselves to the consideration merely of complex terms, and never dreamed of the abbreviations in the manner of signification of words. Which latter has however been a much more abundant cause of borrowing foreign words than the former. And indeed it is true that almost all the complex terms (merely as such) which we have adopted from other languages, might be, and many of them were, better expressed in the Anglo-Saxon: -I mean, better for an Anglo-Saxon: because more intelligible to him, and more homogeneous with the rest of his language. Yet I am of opinion (but on different ground from any taken by the declaimers on either side) that those, who by thus borrowing have produced our present English speech, deserve from us, but in a very different degree, both thanks and censure. Great thanks, in that they have introduced into the English some most useful abbreviations in manner of signification; which the Anglo-Saxon, as well as all the other Northern languages, wanted: and some censure, in that they have done this incompletely, and in an improper manner. The fact certainly is, that our predecessors did not themselves know what they were doing; any more than their successors seem to have known hitherto the real importance and benefit of what has been done. And of this the Grammars and Philosophy both of antients and moderns are a sufficient proof. An oversight much to be deplored: for I' am strongly persuaded (and I think I have good reason to be so) that had the Greek and Latin Grammarians known and explained the nature and intrinsic value of the riches of their own language, neither would their descendants have lost any of those advantages, nor would the languages of Europe have been at this day in the corrupt and deficient state in which we, more and less, find them. For those languages which have borrowed these abbreviations, would have avoided the partiality and patchwork, as well as the corruptions and improprieties with which they now abound; and those living languages of Europe which still want these advantages wholly, would long ere this have intirely supplied their defects.

F.

It seems to me that you rather exaggerate the importance of these abbreviations. Can it be of such mighty consequence to gain a little time in communication?

H.

Even that is important. But it rests not there. A short, close, and compact method of speech, answers the purpose of a map upon a reduced scale: it assists greatly the comprehension of our understanding: and, in general reasoning, frequently enables us, at one glance, to take in very numerous and distant important relations and conclusions, which would otherwise totally escape us. But this objection comes to me with an ill grace from you, who have expressed such frequent nausea and disgust at the any-lengthian Lord with his numerous strings, that excellent political swimmer; whose tedious reasons, you have often complained, are as "two graines of wheat hid in two bushels of chaffe."

And here, if you please, we will conclude our discussion for the present.

F.

No. If you finish thus, you will leave me much unsatisfied; nor shall I think myself fairly treated by you.

You have told me that a Verb is (as every word also must be) a Noun; but you added, that it is also something more: and that the title of Verb was given to it, on account of that distinguishing something more than the mere Nouns convey. You have then proceeded to the simple Verb adjectived, and to the different adjectived Moods, and to the different adjectived Tenses of the verb. But you have not all the while explained to me what you mean by the naked simple Verb unadjectived. Nor have you uttered a single syllable concerning that something which the naked Verb unattended by Mood, Tense, Number, Person, and Gender, (which last also some languages add to it) signifies More or Besides the mere Noun.

What is the Verb? What is that peculiar differential circumstance which, added to the definition of a Noun, constitutes the Verb?

Is the Verb, 1. "Dictio variabilis, quæ significat actionem aut passionem."

- Or, 2. "Dictio variabilis per modos."
- Or, 3. "Quod adsignificat tempus sine casu."
- Or, 4. "Quod agere, pati, vel esse, significat."
- Or, 5. "Nota rei sub tempore."
- Or, 6. "Pars orationis præcipua sine casu."
- Or, 7. "An Assertion."

- Or, 8. "Nihil significans, et quasi nexus et copula, ut verba alia quasi animaret."
 - Or, 9. "Un mot declinable indeterminatif."
- Or, 10. "Un mot qui presente à l'esprit un être indeterminé, designé seulement par l'idée generale de l'existence sous une relation à une modification."

Or, 11. ——

H.

A truce, a truce.—I know you are not serious in laying this trash before me: for you could never yet for a moment bear a negative or a quasi in a definition. I perceive whither you would lead me; but I am not in the humour at present to discuss with you the meaning of Mr. Harris's—"Whatever a thing may Be, it must first of necessity Be, before it can possibly Be any thing ELSE." With which precious jargon he commences his account of the Verb. No, No. We will leave off here for the present. It is true that my evening is now fully come, and the night fast approaching; yet, if we shall have a tolerably lengthened twilight, we may still perhaps find time enough for a further conversation on this subject: And finally, (if the times will bear it) to apply this system of Language to all the different systems of Metaphysical (i. e. verbal) Imposture.

THE END.

A LETTER

TO

JOHN DUNNING, Esq.

By Mr. HORNE.

Vengono di quelle occasioni che tutto serve:

E dice il proverbio a questo proposito;

Impare l'arte, e mettila da parte.

Goldoni.

Printed 1778.

A LETTER

TO

JOHN DUNNING, Esq.

DEAR SIR,

IT would be worse than superfluous in me even to hint to you why none of the reasons given for over-ruling my Exception are satisfactory to my mind. But there is something very curious in the precedent of the King and Lawley, which, I am persuaded, neither those who took the Exception, nor perhaps the Judges who decided that case (though the reason they gave destroys the effect of the precedent towards me), nor the Judge who quoted it, were aware of.

As it is intirely out of the line of the profession, and its novelty may perhaps afford you some entertainment; as it is an offering worthy your acceptance, and cannot be presented to you by any other hand, I intreat your forgiveness for laying it before you.

The precedent of that supposed omission is produced to justify a real omission in the information against me: when indeed there was no omission in the information against Lawley. But the Averment said to be omitted, was, not only substantially, but literally made.

- "The exception taken was, that it was not positively averred that Crooke was indicted; it was only laid that she sciens that Crooke had been indicted and was to be tried for forgery, did so and so."
- -- "She knowing that Crooke had been indicted for forgery, did so and so."—

That is, literally thus,

—"Crooke had been indicted for forgery," (there is the averment literally made)—"She, knowing that, did so and so."—

Such, Sir, is, in all cases, the unsuspected construction, not VOL. II. 2 L only in our own but in every language in the world, where the conjunction THAT (or some equivalent word) is employed. I speak it confidently, because I know (and, with Lord Monboddo's permission, a priori) that it must be so; and I have likewise tried it in a great variety of languages, antient as well as modern, Asiatic as well as European.

I am very well aware, Sir, that, should I stop here, what I have now advanced would seem very puerile; and a mere quibbling trick or play upon words; founded upon the fortuitous similarity of sound between THAT the article or pronoun, as it is called, and THAT the conjunction: between which two, though they have the same sound, it is universally imagined that there is not any the smallest correspondence or similarity of signi-But I deny that any words change their nature in fication. this manner, so as to belong sometimes to one part of speech and sometimes to another, from the different manner of using them. I never could perceive any such fluctuation in any word whatever: though I know it is a general charge brought erroneously against words of almost every denomination. But it is all error; arising from the false measure which has been taken of almost every sort of words. Whilst the words themselves continue faithfully and steadily attached, each to the standard under which it was originally enlisted. As the word THAT does, which, however used and employed, and however named and classed, always retains one and the same signification. Unnoticed abbreviation in construction, and difference of position, have caused this appearance of fluctuation; and (since the time of the elder Stoics) have misled the grammarians and philosophers of all languages both antient and modern: for in all they make the same mistake.

If I should ask any of these gentlemen, whether it is not strange and improper that we should, without any reason or necessity, employ in English the same word for two different meanings and purposes; would he not readily acknowledge that it was wrong, and that he could see no reason for it, but many reasons against it? Well, then is it not more strange that this same impropriety, in this same case, should run through ALL languages? And that they should ALL use an Article, without any reason, unnecessarily, and improperly, for this same Conjunction; with which it has, as is pretended, no correspondence nor similarity of signification? Yet this is certainly done in ALL languages; as any one may easily find by inquiry. Now does not the uniformity and universality of this supposed mistake and unnecessary impropriety (in languages which have no connexion with each other) naturally lead us to suspect that this usage of the article may perhaps be neither mistaken nor improper; but that the mistake may lie only with us, who do not understand it? I will make use of the leisure which Imprisonment affords me, to examine a few Instances; and, still keeping the same signification of the sentences, shew, by a resolution of their construction, the truth of my assertion.

EXAMPLE.

"I wish you to believe THAT I would not wilfully hurt a fly."

RESOLUTION.

"I would not wilfully hurt a fly, I wish you to believe THAT" (assertion).

EXAMPLE.

"You say THAT the same arm which when contracted can lift —, when extended to its utmost reach will not be able to raise — : You mean THAT we should never forget our situation, and THAT we should be prudently contented to do good within our sphere, where it can have an effect: and THAT we should not be misled, even by a virtuous benevolence and public spirit, to waste ourselves in fruitless efforts beyond our power of influence."

RESOLUTION.

EXAMPLE.

"They who have well considered THAT kingdoms rise or fall, and THAT their inhabitants are happy or miserable, not so much from any local or accidental advantages or disadvantages; but accordingly as they are well or ill governed; may best determine how far a virtuous mind can be neutral in politics."

RESOLUTION.

"Kingdoms rise or fall, not so much from any local or accidental advantages or disadvantages, but accordingly as they are well or ill governed; they who have considered THAT (maxim) may best determine how far a virtuous mind can be neutral in politics. And the inhabitants of kingdoms are happy or miserable not so much from any local or accidental advantages or disadvantages, but accordingly as they are well or ill governed; they who have considered THAT, may best determine how far a virtuous mind can be neutral in politics."

EXAMPLE.

"Thieves rise by night, THAT they may cut men's throats."

RESOLUTION.

"Thieves may cut men's throats, (for) THAT (purpose) they rise by night."

After the same manner may all sentences be resolved, where the supposed conjunction THAT (or its equivalent) is employed: and by such resolution it will always be discovered to have merely the same force and signification, and to be in fact nothing else but an Article.

And this is not the case in English alone, where THAT is the only conjunction of the same signification which we employ in this manner; but this same method of resolution takes place in those languages also which have different conjunctions for this same purpose: for the original of my last example (where ut is employed, and not the Latin neuter article Quod,) will be resolved in the same manner.

"UT jugulent homines surgunt de nocte latrones."

For though Sanctius, who struggled so hard to withdraw quod from amongst the conjunctions, still left ut amongst them without molestation; yet is ut no other than the Greek article ôti, adopted for this conjunctive purpose by the Latins, and by them originally written uti: the obeing changed into u from that propensity which both the antient Romans had and the modern Italians still have, upon many occasions, to pronounce even their own o like an u. Of which I need not produce any instances*. The resolution therefore of the original will be like that of the translation.

" Latrones jugulent homines (DI) ori surgunt de nocte."

I shall not at this time stop here to account etymologically for the different words which some other languages (for there are others beside the Latin) employ in this manner instead of their own article: though, if it were exacted from me, I believe I should not refuse the undertaking; although it is not the easiest part of etymology: for Abbreviation and Corruption are always busiest with the words which are most frequently in use.

Perhaps it may be thought that, though this method of resolution will answer with most sentences, yet that there is one usage of the conjunction THAT which it will not explain.

I mean in such instances as this:

" IF THAT the King
Have any way your good deserts forgot,
He bids you name your griefs."

How are we to bring out the article THAT, when two conjunctions, as it often happens, come in this manner together?

The truth of the matter is that IF is merely a Verb. It is merely the imperative mood of the Gothic and Anglo-Saxon verbs FIFAN, Lipan; and in those languages, as well as in the English formerly, this supposed conjunction was pronounced and written as the common imperative, purely FIF, Henry Estiene, de la precellence du langage François.

[&]quot;Quant à la voyelle U, pource qu'ils (les Italiens) l'aiment fort, ainsi que nous cognoissons par ces mots ufficio, ubrigato, &c. je pense bien qu'ils la respectent plus que les autres."

Lip, Gif.—Thus in B. Jonson's Sad Shepherd (which though it be " such wool

As from mere English flocks his muse could pull,"

I agree with its author,

" is a fleece,

To match or those of Sicily or Greece")

it is thus written,

" My largesse.

Hath lotted her to be your brother's mistresse, Gir she can be reclaimed; Gir not, his prey."

And accordingly our corrupted 15 has always the signification of the present English imperative GIVE, and no other. So that the resolution of the construction in the instance I produced from Shakespeare, will be as before in the others.

"The King may have forgotten your good deserts; GIVE

THAT in any way; he bids you name your griefs."

And here, as an additional proof, we may observe, that whenever the datum, upon which any conclusion depends, is a sentence; the article THAT, if not expressed, is always understood, and may be inserted after IF. As in the instance I have produced above, the poet might have said

"GIF (THAT) she can be reclaim'd," &c.

For the resolution is,

"She can be reclaim'd, GIVE THAT; my largesse hath lotted her to be your brother's mistresse. She cannot be reclaim'd, GIVE THAT; my largesse hath lotted her to be your brother's prey."

But the article THAT is not understood, and cannot be inserted after 1F; where the datum is not a sentence, but some noun governed by the verb 1F or GIVE. As—

Example.

"How will the weather dispose of you tomorrow? IF fair, it will send me abroad: IF foul, it will keep me at home."

Here we cannot say—" if that fair, it will send me abroad: if that foul, it will keep me at home."

Because in this case the verb 1F governs the noun: and the resolved construction is ——

RESOLUTION.

"GIVE fair weather, it will send me abroad: GIVE foul weather, it will keep me at home."

But make the datum a sentence; as-"IF it is fair weather, it will send me abroad: IF it is foul weather, it will keep me at home;"——

And then the article THAT is understood, and may be inserted after if. As,—"if THAT it is fair weather, it will send me abroad: if THAT it is foul weather, it will keep me at home."—The resolution then being—"It is fair weather, give THAT, it will send me abroad: It is foul weather, give THAT, it will keep me at home."

And this you will find to hold universally, not only with 1F, but with many other supposed conjunctions, such as unless that, though that, lest that, &c. (which are really verbs,) put in this manner before the article THAT.

We have in English another word, which (though now rather obsolete) used frequently to supply the place of 11. As,

"An you had an eye behind you, you might see more detraction at your heels, than fortunes before you."

No doubt it will be asked; in this and in all similar instances what is AN?

I do not know that any person has ever attempted to explain it, except Dr. S. Johnson in his Dictionary. He says,——
"AN is sometimes, in old authors, a contraction of AND IF."
——Of which he gives a very unlucky instance from Shakespeare; where both AN and IF are used in the same line;

" He cannot flatter, He!

An honest mind and plain; he must speak truth! An they will take it,—So. 17 not, he's plain."

Where if AN was a contraction of AND IF; AN and IF should rather change places.

But I can by no means agree with Johnson's account. A part of one word only, employed to shew that another word is compounded with it, would indeed be a curious method of contraction: although even this account of it would serve my purpose; but the truth will serve it better: for An is also a verb, and may very well supply the place of if: it being nothing else but the imperative mood of the Anglo-Saxon verb Anan, which likewise means to give or to grant.

Nor does an ever (as Johnson supposes) signify as IF; nor is it a contraction of them.

I know indeed that Johnson produces Addison's authority for it.

"My next pretty correspondent, like Shakespeare's Lion in Pyramus and Thisbe, roars AN it were any nightingale."

Now if Addison had so written, I should answer roundly, that he had written false English. But he never did so write. He only quoted it in mirth. And Johnson, an editor of Shake-speare, ought to have known and observed it. And then, instead of Addison's or even Shakespeare's authority from whom the expression is borrowed; he should have quoted Bottom's, the Weaver: whose language corresponds with the character Shakespeare has given him *.

"I will aggravate my voice so (says Bottom) that I will roar you as gently as any sucking dove: I will roar your An 'twere any nightingale."

If Johnson is satisfied with such authority as this for the different signification and propriety of English words; he will find enough of it amongst the clowns in all our comedies; and Master Bottom in particular, in this very sentence, will furnish him with many new meanings. But, I believe, Johnson will not find AN used for AS IF, either seriously or clownishly, in any other part of Addison or Shakespeare, except in this speech of Bottom, and in another of Hostess Quickly.—

"He made a finer end, and went away an it had been any Christom child."

Now when I say that these two English words IF and AN which have been called conditional conjunctions, (and whose ^{* &}quot;The shallow'st thickscull of that barren sort, A crew of patches, rude mechanicals, That work for bread upon Athenian stalls."

force and manner of signification, as well as of the other conjunctions we are directed by Mr. Locke to search after in-"the several views, postures, stands, turns, limitations, and exceptions, and several other thoughts of the mind for which we have either none or very deficient names,") when I say that they are merely the original Imperatives of the verbs to GIVE or to GRANT; I would not be understood to mean that the conditional conjunctions of all other languages are likewise to be found, like IF and AN, in the original imperatives of some of their own or derived verbs meaning to give. No, if that were my opinion, it would instantly be confuted by the conditionals of the Greek and Latin and Irish and many living languages. But I mean that those words which are called conditional conjunctions are to be accounted for, in ALL languages, in the same manner as I have accounted for IF and AN. that they must all mean precisely as these two do,—give and GRANT; but some word equivalent. Such as,—Be it, Suppose, Allow, Permit, Suffer, &c.

Which meaning is to be sought for from the particular etymology of each language; not from some unnamed and unknown—" turns, stands, postures, &c. of the mind."

In short, to put this matter out of doubt, I mean to discard all supposed mystery, not only about these Conditionals, but about all those words also which Mr. Harris and others distinguish from Prepositions, and call Conjunctions of sentences. I deny them to be a separate sort of words, or part of speech by themselves. For they have not a separate manner of signification: although they are not "devoid of signification." And the particular signification of each must be sought for from amongst the other parts of speech, by the help of the particular etymology of each respective language. By such means alone can we clear away the obscurity and errors in which grammarians and philosophers have been involved by the corruption of some common words and the useful Abbreviations of Construc-And at the same time we shall get rid of that farrago of useless distinctions into Conjunctive, Adjunctive, Disjunctive, Sub-disjunctive, Copulative, Continuative, Sub-continuative, Positive, Suppositive, Causal, Collective, Effective, ApprobaPresumptive, Abnegative, Compleconcessive, Motive, Conductive, appear nothing; and (as most other techconcessive, Motive, Conductive, appear nothing; and (as most other techconcessive, Motive, Conductive, appear nothing; and (as most other techconcessive, Motive, Conductive, appear nothing; and (as most other techconcessive, Motive, Conductive, appear nothing; and (as most other techconcessive, Motive, Conductive, appear nothing; and (as most other techconcessive, Motive, Conductive, appear nothing; and (as most other techconcessive, Motive, Conductive, appear nothing; and (as most other techconcessive, Motive, Conductive, appear nothing; and (as most other techconcessive, Motive, Conductive, appear nothing; and (as most other techconcessive, Motive, Conductive, Con

Mr. Harris concerning the nature of Conjunctions.

First, he says (and makes it a part of their definition) that they are "devoid of signification"." Afterwards he allows that they have "a kind of signification." "But this kind of signification is obscure:" i. e. a signification unknown: something I suppose (as Chillingworth couples them) like a secret tradition, or a silent thunder; for it amounts to the same thing as a signification which does not signify: an obscure or unknown signification being no signification at all. But not contented with these inconsistencies, which to a less learned man would seem sufficient of all conscience, Mr. Harris goes further, and adds, that they are a—"kind of middle beings" (he must mean between signification and no signification); "sharing the attributes of both;" (i. e. of sig. and no sig.) and "conduce to link them both (i. e. signification and no signification)" together."

It would have helped us a little if Mr. Harris had here told us what that middle state is, between signification and no sigmification! what are the attributes of no signification! and how, signification and no signification can be linked together!

Now all this may, for aught I know, be—"read and admired, as long as there is any taste for FINE WRITING in Britain."—But with such unlearned and vulgar philosophers as Mr. Locke and his disciples, who seek not taste and elegance, but truth and common sense in philosophical subjects, I believe it will never pass as a "perfect example of analysis," nor bear away the palm for "acuteness of investigation" and "perspicuity of explication."—For, (separated from the FINE WRITING,) thus is the Conjunction explained by Mr. Harris;——

You will easily perceive, Sir, by what I have said, that I mean flatly to contradict Mr. Harris's definition of a Conjunction; which, he says, is—"A part of speech devoid of signification itself, but so formed as to help signification by making two or more significant sentences to be one significant sentence."

And I have the less scruple to do that; because Mr. Harris makes no scruple to contradict himself. For he afterwards acknowledges that some of them—"have a kind of obscure signification, when taken alone; and that they appear in grammar like Zoophytes in Nature, a kind of middle beings of amphibious character, which, by sharing the attributes of the higher and the lower, conduce to link the whole together."

Now I suppose it is impossible to convey a Nothing in a more ingenious manner. How much superior is this to the oracular Saw of another learned author on language (Lord Monboddo), who amongst much other intelligence of equal importance, tells us with a very solemn face, and ascribes it to Plato, that—" Every man that opines must opine something, the subject of opinion therefore is not nothing "."

But Mr. Harris has the advantage of a similie over this gentleman: and though similies appear with most beauty and propriety in works of imagination, they are frequently found most useful to the authors of philosophical treatisear and have often helped them out at many a dead lift, by giving them an appearance of saying something, when indeed they kad nothing to say. present instance, and see what intelligence we can draw from Mr. Harris concerning the nature of Conjunctions.

signification and no signification; and linking signification and no signification together.

If others of a more elegant Taste for Fine Writing are able to receive either pleasure or instruction from such "truly philosophical language," I shall neither dispute with them nor eavy them: but can only deplore the dulness of my own apprehension, who, notwithstanding the great authors quoted in Mr. Harris's Treatise, and the great authors who recommend it, cannot help considering this "perfect example of Analysis," as,——An improved compilation of almost all the errors which grammarians have been accumulating from the time of Aristotle down to our present days of technical and learned affectation.

I can easily suppose that in this censure which I thus unreservedly cast upon Mr. Harris, (and which I do not mean to confine to his account of the conjunctions alone, but extend to all that he has written on the subject of language), I can easily suppose that I shall be thought, by those who know not the grounds of my censure, to have spoken too sharply. will probably say that I still carry with me my old humour in politics, though my subject is now different; and that, according to the hackneyed accusation, I am against authority, only because authority is against me. But, if I know any thing of myself, I can with truth declare, that Neminem libenter nominem, nisi ut laudem; sed nec peccata reprehenderem, nisi ut aliis prodessem. And so far from spurning authority, I have always upon philosophical subjects addressed myself to an inquiry into the opinions of others with all the diffidence of conscious ignorance; and have been disposed to admit of half an argument from a great name. So that it is not my fault if I am forced to carry instead of following the lantern; but at all events it is better than walking in total darkness.

And yet, though I believe I differ from all the accounts which have hitherto been given of language, I am not so much without authority as may be imagined. Mr. Harris himself, and all the grammarians whom he has and whom he has not quoted, are my authorities. Their own doubts, their difficulties, their dissatisfaction, their contradictions, their obscurity on all these points, are my authorities against them: for their system and their difficulties vanish together. Indeed, unless I had been repeating what others have written, it is impossible I should quote any direct authorities for my own manner of explanation. But let us hear Wilkins, whose industry deserved to have been better employed, and his perseverance better rewarded with discovery; let us hear what he says.

"According to the true philosophy of speech, I cannot conceive this kind of words" (he speaks of Adverbs and Conjunctions) "to be properly a distinct part of speech, as they are commonly called. But untill they can be distributed into their proper places, I have so far complied with the grammars of instituted languages, as to place them here together."

Mr. Locke's dissatisfaction with all the accounts which he had seen, is too well known to need repetition.

Sanctius rescued QUOD particularly from the number of these mysterious Conjunctions; though he left ur amongst them.

And Servius, Scioppius, J. G. Vossius, Perizonius, and others, have displaced and explained many other supposed adverbs and conjunctions.

Skinner has accounted for 17 before me, and in the same manner; which, though so palpable, Lye confirms and compliments.

Even S. Johnson, though mistakenly, has attempted AND. And would find no difficulty with THEREFORE.

In short, there is not such a thing as a Conjunction in any language, which may not, by a skilful herald, be traced home to its own family and origin; without having recourse to contradiction and mystery, with Mr. Harris; or, with Mr. Locke, cleaving open the head of man, to give it such a birth as Minerva's from the brain of Jupiter.

After all, I do not know whether I shall be quietly permitted to call these authorities in my favour: for I must fairly acknowledge that the full stream and current sets the other way, and only some little brook or rivulet runs with me. I must confess that all the authorities which I have alleged, except Wilkins, are upon the whole against me. For, though they have explained the meaning and traced the derivation of many adverbs and conjunctions; yet, (except Sanctius in the particular instance of Quod,—whose conjunctive use in Latin he too strenuously denies), they all acknowledge them still to be adverbs or conjunctions.

It is true, they distinguish them by the title of reperts or usurpats: But they at the same time acknowledge (indeed the very distinction itself is an acknowledgment) that there are others which are real, primigenia, nativa, purs.

But the true reason of this distinction is, because that of the origin of the greater part of them they are totally ignorant. But has any philosopher or grammarian ever yet told us what a real, original, native, pure Adverb or Conjunction, is? Or which of these conjunctions of sentences are so? ——Whenever that is done, in any language, I may venture to promise that I will shew those likewise to be repertas, and usurpatas, as well as the rest. I shall only add, that though Abbreviation and Corruption are always busiest with the words which are most frequently in use; yet the words most frequently used are least liable to be totally laid aside. And therefore they are often retained,—(I mean that branch of them which is most frequently used) when most of the other words (and even the other branches of these retained words) are, by various changes and accidents, quite lost to a language. HENCE the difficulty of accounting for them. And HENCE, (because only one branch of these declinable words is retained in a language) arises the notion of their being indeclinable; and a separate sort of words, or Part of Speech by themselves. But that they are not indeclinable, is sufficiently evident by what I have already said: For Lip, An, &c. certainly could not be called indeclinable, when all the other branches of those verbs, of which they are the regular Imperatives, were likewise in use. And that the words If, An, &c. (which still retain their original signification, and are used in the very same manner, and for the same purpose as formerly) should now be called indeclinable, proceeds merely from the ignorance of those who could not account for them; and who, therefore, with Mr. Harris, were driven to say that they have neither meaning * nor Inflection: whilst

^{*} There is not, nor is it possible there should be, a word in any language, which has not a complete meaning and signification, even when taken by notwithstanding they were still forced to acknowledge (either directly, or by giving them different titles of conditional, adversative, &c.) that they have a "kind of obscure meaning."

How much more candid and ingenuous would it have been, to have owned fairly that they did not understand the nature of these Conjunctions; and, instead of wrapping it up in mystery, to have exhorted and encouraged others to a further search.

Now, Sir, I am presumptuous enough to assert that what I have done with 1F and AN, may be done universally with all the Conjunctions of all the languages in the world. I know that many persons have often been misled by a fanciful etymology; but I assert it universally not so much from my own elender acquisition of languages, as from arguments a priori: which arguments are however confirmed to me by a successful search in many other languages besides the English, in which I have traced these supposed unmeaning, indeclinable conjunctions to their source; and should not at all fear undertaking to shew clearly and satisfactorily the origin and precise meaning of each of these pretended unmeaning, indeclinable conjunctions, at least in all the dead and living languages of Europe.

But because men talk very safely of what they may do, and what they might have done; and I cannot expect that others who have no suspicion of the thing, should come over to my opinion, unless I perform, at least as much as Wilkins (who had a suspicion of it) required before he would venture to differ from the grammars of instituted languages; I will distribute our English conjunctions into their proper places. And thus wilfully impose upon myself a task which I am told "no man however learned or sagacious has yet been able to perform †."

itself. Adjectives, prepositions, adverbs, &c. have all complete, separate meanings; not difficult to be discovered.

^{*}This general censure would be highly unjust, if an exception of praise was not here made for Bacon, Wilkins, Locke, and S. Johnson; who are ingenuous on the subject.

^{† &}quot;The particles are, among all nations, applied with so great latitude, that they are not easily reducible under any regular scheme of explication: this difficulty is not less, nor perhaps greater, in English than in other lan-

HENCE the difficulty of accounting for them. And HENCE, (because only one branch of these declinable words is retained in a language) arises the notion of their being indeclinable; and a separate sort of words, or Part of Speech by themselves. But that they are not indeclinable, is sufficiently evident by what I have already said: For Lip, An, &c. certainly could not be called indeclinable, when all the other branches of those verbs, of which they are the regular Imperatives, were likewise in use. And that the words If, An, &c. (which still retain their original signification, and are used in the very same manner, and for the same purpose as formerly) should now be called indeclinable, proceeds merely from the ignorance of those who could not account for them; and who, therefore, with Mr. Harris, were driven to say that they have neither meaning * nor Inflection: whilst

^{*} There is not, nor is it possible there should be, a word in any language, which has not a complete meaning and signification, even when taken by notwithstanding they were still forced to acknowledge (either directly, or by giving them different titles of conditional, adversative, &c.) that they have a "kind of obscure meaning."

How much more candid and ingenuous would it have been, to have owned fairly that they did not understand the nature of these Conjunctions; and, instead of wrapping it up in mystery, to have exhorted and encouraged others to a further search *.

Now, Sir, I am presumptuous enough to assert that what I have done with IF and AN, may be done universally with all the Conjunctions of all the languages in the world. I know that many persons have often been misled by a fanciful etymology; but I assert it universally not so much from my own slender acquisition of languages, as from arguments a priori: which arguments are however confirmed to me by a successful search in many other languages besides the English, in which I have traced these supposed unmeaning, indeclinable conjunctions to their source; and should not at all fear undertaking to shew clearly and satisfactorily the origin and precise meaning of each of these pretended unmeaning, indeclinable conjunctions, at least in all the dead and living languages of Europe.

But because men talk very safely of what they may do, and what they might have done; and I cannot expect that others who have no suspicion of the thing, should come over to my opinion, unless I perform, at least as much as Wilkins (who had a suspicion of it) required before he would venture to differ from the grammars of instituted languages; I will distribute our English conjunctions into their proper places. And thus wilfully impose upon myself a task which I am told "no man however learned or sagacious has yet been able to perform †."

itself. Adjectives, prepositions, adverbs, &c. have all complete, separate meanings; not difficult to be discovered.

^{*} This general censure would be highly unjust, if an exception of praise was not here made for Bacon, Wilkins, Locke, and S. Johnson; who are ingenuous on the subject.

^{† &}quot;The particles are, among all nations, applied with so great latitude, that they are not easily reducible under any regular scheme of explication: this difficulty is not less, nor perhaps greater, in English than in other lan-

These I apprehend are the only conjunctions in our language which can cause any difficulty; and it would be impertinent in me to explain such as Be-it, Albeit, Notwithstanding, Nevertheless, Set *, Save, Except, Out-cept +, Out-take 1, To wit, Because, &c. which are evident at first sight.

I hope it will be acknowledged that this is coming to the point; and is fairer than shuffling them over as all philosophers. and grammarians have hitherto done; or than repeating after others, that they are not themselves any part of languages, but only such Accessaries; as Salt, is to-Meat, or Water to Bread; or that they are the mere Edging, or Sauce of language; or that they are like the Handles to Cups, or the Plumes to Helmets, or the Binding to Books, or Harness for Horses; or that they are Pegs, and Nails, and Nerves, and Joints, and Ligaments, and Lime and Mortar, and so forth.

In which kind of pretty similies philosophers and grammarians seem to have vied with one another; and have often endeavoured to amuse their readers and cover their own ignorance, by very learnedly disputing the propriety of the similie, instead of explaining the nature of the conjunction.

I must acknowledge that I have not any authorities for the derivations which I have given of these words; and that all former etymologists are against me. But I am persuaded that all future etymologists (and perhaps some philosophers) will acknowledge their obligation to me: for these troublesome Conjunctions, which have hitherto caused them so much mistaken and unsatisfactory labour, shall save them many an error and many a weary step in future.

They shall no more expose themselves by unnatural forced conceits to derive the English and all other languages from the Greek or the Hebrew, or some imaginary primæval tongue. The Conjunctions of every language shall teach them whither to direct and where to stop their inquiries: for wherever the evident meaning and origin of the conjunctions of any language can be found, there is the certain source of the whole*.

But, I beg pardon; this is digressing from my present purpose. I have nothing to do with the learning of mere curiosity; nor must (at this time) be any further concerned with etymology, and the false philosophy received concerning language and the human understanding, than as it is connected with the point with which I began.

If you please therefore, and if your patience is not exhausted, we will return to the conjunctions I have derived:

^{*} This is to be understood with certain limitations not necessary to be now mentioned.

and if you think it worth the while we will examine the conjectures of other persons about them, and see whether I have not something better than their authority in my favour.

IF. AN.

If and AN may be used mutually and indifferently to supply each other's place.

Besides having Skinner's authority for 17, I suppose that the meaning and derivation of this principal supporter of the Tripod of Truth * are so very clear and simple and universally allowed, as to need no further discourse about it.

GIF is to be found not only, as Skinner says, in Lincolnshire; but in all our old writers. G. Douglas almost always uses Gif; once or twice only he has used IF; and once he uses Gewe for Gif. Chaucer commonly uses IF; but sometimes YEVE +, YEF, and YF. And it is to be observed that in Chaucer, and other old writers, the verb to Give suffers the same variations in the manner of writing it, however used, whether conjunctively or otherwise.

"Well ought a priest ensample for to YEVE."

Prol. to Cant. Toles.

"Lo here the letters selid of this thing,
That I mote bere in all the haste I may;
YEVE ye well ought unto your sonne the king,
I am your servant both by night and day."

Man of Lawes Tale.

"This gode ensample to his shepe he YAFFE."

Prol. to Cant. Tales.

YEF is also used as well for the common imperative as for what we call the conjunction.

"Your vertue is so grete in heven above,
That is the list I shall well have my love.
Thy temple shall I worship evir mo,
And on thine aulter, where I ryde or go,

^{*} See Plutarch, Why E I was engraved upon the gates of the temple of Apollo.

⁺ YEVE was commonly used in England instead of Give, even so low down as in the sixteenth century. See Henry VIIth's Will.

I woll don sacrifise, and firis bete;
And YEF ye woll nat so my lady swete,
Then pray I you tomorrow with a spere
That Arcite do me through the herte bere:
Then reke I not, whan I have lost my life,
Though Arcite winnin her to his wife.
This is th' effect and ende of my prayere;
YEF me my lady, blissful lady dere."

Chaucer. Knight's Tale.

GIN * is often used in our Northern counties and by the Scotch, as we use IF or AN: which they do with equal propriety and as little corruption: for Gin is no other than the participle Given, Gi'en, Gi'n. (As they also use Gie for Give, and Gien for Given, when they are not used conjunctively.) And hoc dato is of equal conjunctive value in a sentence with da hoc.

Even our Londoners often pronounce Give and Given in the same manner;

As,—" Gi' me your hand"

"I have Gin it him well."

I do not know that AN has been attempted by any one, except S. Johnson: and from the judicious distinction he has made between Junius and Skinner, I am persuaded that he will himself be the first person to relinquish his own conjecture.

UNLESS.

Skinner says,—"Unless, nisi, præter, præterquam, q. d. one-less, i. e. uno dempto seu excepto: vel potius ab Onlegan, dimittere, liberare, q. d. Hoc dimisso."

It is extraordinary, after his judicious derivation of 1F, that Skinner should be at a loss about that of UNLESS: especially as he had it in a manner before him: for Onley, dimitte, was surely more obvious and immediate than Onleyed, dimisso. As for—One-less, i. e. uno dempto seu excepto, it is too poor to deserve notice.

^{* &}quot;Gin, Gif, in the old Saxon is Gif, from whence the word If is made per aphæresin literæ G. Gif from the verb Gifan, dare; and is as much as Dato."—Ray's North Country Words.

So low down as in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, this, conjunction was sometimes written oneles: for so (amongst others) Robert Horne, Bishop of Winchester, writes it in his Answeare to Fekenham touchinge the othe of the supremacy.—

"I coulde not choose, oneres I woulde shewe myselfe overmuch unkinde unto my native countrey, but take penne in hande, and shape him a ful and plaine answeare, without any curiositie."—Preface.

And this way of spelling it, which should rather have directed Skinner to its true etymology, might perhaps contribute to mislead him to the childish conjecture of "one-less, Uno dempto."—But in other places it is written purely on LES.

Thus, in the same book,

"The election of the Pope made by the clergie and people in those daies, was but a vaine thing, onless the Emperour or his lieutenant had confirmed the same." Fol. 48.

"The Pope would not consecrate the elect bishop, onles he had first licence therto of the Emperour." Fol. 63.

"No prince, no not the Emperour himselfe should be present in the councell with the cleargie, ONLES it were when the principall pointes of faith were treated of." Fol. 67.

"He sweareth the Romaines, that they shall never after be present at the election of any Pope, onles they be compelled thereunto by the Emperour." Fol. 71.

"Who maketh no mencion of any priest there present, as you untruely report, only ye will thinke he meant the order, whan he named the faction of the Pharisees." Fol. 111.

It is likewise sometimes written—onlesse and onelesse.

"So that none should be consecrate, onlesse he were commended and investured bishop of the kinge." Fol. 59.

"And further to commaunde the newe electe Pope to forsake that dignitie unlawfully come by, onlesse they woulde make a reasonable satisfaction." Fol. 73.

"That the Pope might sende into his dominions no Legate, onlesse the kinge should sende for him." Fol. 76.

"What man, onlesse he be not well in his wittes, will say that" &c. Fol. 95.

- "To exercise this kinde of jurisdiction, neither kinges nor civil magistrates may take uppon him, onlesse he be lawfully called thereunto." Fol. 105.
- "That from hencefoorth none should be Pope, onelesse he were created by the consent of the Emperour." Fol. 75.
- "Ye cannot finde so muche as the bare title of one of them, ONELESSE it be of a bishoppe." Fol. 113.

In the same manner, Gardiner, bishop of Winchester, writes it in his "Declaration against Joye*."

- "No man commeth to me, onlesse my Father draweth hym." Fol. 29.
- "Can any man further reply to this carpenter, ONERS a man wolde saye, that the carpenter was also after, the thefe hymselfe." Fol. 42.
- "For ye fondely improve a conclusion which myght stande and be true, onlesse in teaching ye wyl so handel the matter, as" &c. Fol. 54.
- "We cannot love God, onless he prepareth our harte, and geve us that grace: no more can we believe God, onlesse he giveth us the gift of belefe." Fol. 64.
- "In every kynde the female is commenly barren, onlesse it conceyveth of the male; so is concupyscence barren and voyde of synne, onlesse it conceyve of man the agreymente of his free wyll." Fol. 66.
- "We may not properly saye we apprehend justification by fayth, onlesse we wolde call the promisse of God," &c. Fol. 68.
- "Such other pevishe words as men be encombred to heare, onles they wolde make Goddes worde, the matter of the Devylles strife." Fol. 88.

^{*} In the same manner Barnes (on the occasion of whose death Gardiner wrote this Declaration) writes it in his Supplication to K. Henry VIII.

[&]quot;I shall come to the councell, when soever I bee called, ONLES I be lawfully let." p. 195.

take up his couche and walke, onlesse God sayeth," &c. Fol. 95.*

I have here given you all the instances where this conjunction is used in these two small tracts I have quoted, which I suppose are something more than sufficient for my purpose; unless you had as much leisure to read as I have to write.

I do not remember to have ever met with Onley used in the Anglo-Saxon as we use Unless; (though I have no doubt that it was so used in discourse) but, instead of it, they frequently employ nymbe or nembe: (which is evidently the imperative nym or nem of nyman or neman, to which is subjoined be, i.e. that.) And—Nymbe, Take away that,—may very well supply the place of—Onley (be expressed or understood) Dismiss that.

Lest, the imperative of Legan, (which has the same meaning as Onlegan) is likewise used sometimes by old writers instead of Unless. As,

"And thus I am constrenit, als nere as I may,
To hald his verse, and go nane uthir way.
LES sum historie, subtell worde, or ryme,
Causis me mak degressioun sum tyme."

G. Douglas. Preface.

You will please to observe that all the languages which have a correspondent conjunction to Unless, as well as the manner

^{*} So in the Trial of Sir John Oldcastle, Lord Cobham, 1413.

[&]quot;It was not possible for them to make whole Christes cote without seme ONLESSE certeyn great men were brought out of the way."

So in the Whetstone of Witte.

[&]quot;I see moure menne to acknowledge the benefit of nomber, then I can espie willyng to studie, to attain the benefites of it. Many praise it, but fewe dooe greatly practise it, ONLESSE it bee for the vulgare practice concerning merchaundes trade."—The Whetstone of Witte, by Robert Recorde, Phisician; 1557. (If himself say true, the first author concerning Arithmetic in English: "The first venturer in these darke matters." Preface.)

[&]quot;Yet is it not accepted as a like flatte, ONLES it bee referred to some other square nomber."—Whetstone of Witte, p. 54.

⁺ It is the same imperative at the end of those words which are called adjectives, such as hopeless, motionless, &c. i. c. dismiss hope, dismiss motion, &c.

in which its place is supplied by the languages which have not a correspondent conjunction to it, all strongly justify my derivation.

Though it certainly is not worth the while, I am tempted here to observe the gross mistake Mr. Harris has made in the force of this word, which he calls an "adequate preventive." His example is,—"Troy will be taken, unless the Palladium be preserved."—"That is, (says Mr. Harris,) This alone is sufficient to preserve it."—According to the oracle, so indeed it might be; but the word unless has no such force.

Let us try another instance.

"England will be enslaved, unless the House of Commons continue a part of the legislature."

Now I ask,—Is this alone sufficient to preserve it? We who live in these times know but too well that this very House may be made the instrument of a tyranny as odious and (perhaps) more lasting than that of the Stuarts. I am afraid Mr. Harris's adequate preventive, UNLESS, will not save us. For though it is most cruel and unnatural, yet we know by woful experience that the kid may be seethed in the mother's milk, which Providence appointed for its nourishment; and the liberties of this country be destroyed by that very part of the legislature which was most especially appointed for their security.

EKE.

Junius says,—"Eak, etiam. Goth. Ank A.S. Gac. Al. Auch. D. Og. B. Ook. Viderentur esse ex inverso kai, sed rectius petas ex proxime sequenti Ank An (Isl. Auka) A.S. Eacan. ecan. 1can. Al. Auchon. D. Oge. B. Oecken. Eacan vero, vel Auchon, sunt ab auxen vel aexen, addere, adjicere, augere."

Skinner says,—" EKE, ab A.S. Eac, Leac. Belg. Oock.

Teut. Auch. Fr. Th. Ouch. D. Oc. Etiam."

Skinner then proceeds to the verb,

"To Eke, ab A.S. Eacan. Leican. Iecan, augere, adjicere. Fr. Jun. suo more, deflectit a Gr. au feir. Mallem ab Eac, iterum, quod vide: Quod enim augetur, secundum partes suas quasi iteratur et de novo fit."

In this place Skinner does not seem to enjoy his usual superiority of judgement over Junius: and it is very strange that he should chuse here to derive the verb Eacan from the conjunction Eac, (that is, from its own imperative) rather than the conjunction (that is, the imperative) from the verb. His judgement was more awake when he derived if or cir from Lipan; and not Lipan from Lip: which yet, according to his present method, he should have done.

YET. STILL.

I put the conjunctions YET and STILL here together; because (like If and Λn) they may be used mutually for each other without any alteration in the meaning of the sentences: a circumstance which (though not so obviously as in these instances) happens likewise to some other of the conjunctions; and which is not unworthy of consideration.

According to my derivation of them both, this mutual interchange will not seem at all extraordinary: For yet (which is nothing but the imperative Let or Lyt, of Letan or Lytan, obtinere), and still (which is only the imperative Stell or Steall, of Stellan or Steallian, ponere) may very well supply each other's place, and be indifferently used for the same purpose.

But I will repeat to you the derivations which others have given, and leave you to determine between us.

Mer. Casaubon says—"Ετι, adhuc, ΥΕΤ." Junius says, —"YΕΤ, adhuc, A.S. ζήτ. Cymræis etwa, etto, significat adhuc, etiam, iterum: ex ετι vel αυθις."

Skinner says,—"YET, ab A.S. Let, Leta, adhuc, modo. Teut. Jetzt, jam, mox."

Skinner says,—"STILL, assidue, indesinenter, incessanter. Nescio an ab A.S. Till, addito tantum sibilo: vel a nostro, et credo etiam, A.S. as, ut, sicut, (licet apud Somnerum non occurrat), et eodem Til, usque. q. d. Usque, eodem modo."

ELSE.

This word ELSE, formerly written Alles, Alys, Alyse, Elles, Ellus, Ellis, Els, and now Else; is, as I have said, no other than Aler or Alyr, the imperative of Aleran or Alyran, dimittere.

Mr. Warton, in his History of English Poetry, vol. i. (without any authority, and in spite of the context, which evidently demands ELSE and will not admit of ALSO) has explained ALLES in the following passage by ALSO.

"The Soudan ther he satte in halle;
He sent his messagers faste withalle,
To hire fader the kyng.

And sayde, how so hit ever bifalle, That mayde he wolde clothe in palle

And spousen hire with his ryng.

And ALLES I swere withouten fayle I schull hire winnen in pleyn battayle

With mony an heih lordyng," &c.—Ed. 8vo. vol. ii. p. 24.

The meaning of which is evidently,—"Give me your daughter, ELSE I will take her by force."

It would have been nonsense to say,—"Give me your daughter, Also I will take her by force."

I quote this passage, not for the sake of censuring Mr. Warton, but to give you one of the most recent instances, as I suppose, of ALLES used for ELSE in English.

Junius says,—"Else, aliter, alias, alioqui. A.S. Eller. Al. Alles. D. Ellers."

Skinner says,—" Else ab A.S. Eller, alias, alioquin. Minshew et Dr. Th. H. putant esse contractum a Lat. alias, vel Gr. αλλως; nec sine verisimilitudine."

S. Johnson says,—"ELSE, pronoun, (Eller Saxon) other; one besides. It is applied both to persons and things." He says again—"ELSE, adverb. 1. Otherwise. 2. Besides; except that mentioned."

THOUGH.

Tho' or though (or, as our country-folks more purely pronounce it, that, thau, and thou; and the Scotch who retain in their pronunciation the guttural termination,) is the imperative Dap or Dapiz of the verb Dapian or Dapizan*, con-

^{*} It is remarkable that as there were originally two ways of writing the verb, with the aspirate G or without it; so there still continue the two same different ways of writing the remaining part of this same verb Tho, or Though, with the aspirate G or without it.

cedere, permittere, assentire, consentire. And Dartz becomes Thoug and Though (and Thoch, as G. Douglas and other Scotch authors write it) by a transition of the same sort, and at least as easy, as that of Hawk from harue.

I reckon it not a small confirmation of this etymology, that antiently they often used Algife, Algyff, Allgyf, and Algive, instead of Although. As, ead of Although. As,

"With hevy chere, with dolorous hart and mynd, Eche man may sorrow in his inward thought Thys Lords death, whose pere is hard to fynd ALLGYF England and Fraunce were thorow saught." Skelton.

Skinner says,—"Though, ab A.S. Deah. Belg. Doch. Belg. and Teut. Doch, tamen, etsi, quamvis."

Though this word is called a conjunctive of sentences, it is constantly used (especially by children, and in low discourse,) not only between, but at the end of sentences. As,

"Pro. Why do you maintain your poet's quarrel so with velvet and good clothes? We have seen him in indifferent good clothes e're now himself."

"Boy. And may again. But his clothes shall never be the best thing about him, THOUGH. He will have somewhat beside, either of humane letters or severe honesty, shall speak him a man, though he went naked."

What sentences are here connected by the prior THOUGH?

BUT.

It was this word, BUT, which Mr. Locke had chiefly in view, when he spoke of conjunctions as marking some "stands, turns, limitations, and exceptions of the mind." And it was the corrupt use of this one word (BUT) in modern English, for two words (BOT and BUT) originally (in the Anglo-Saxon) very different in signification, though (by repeated abbreviation and corruption) approaching in sound, which chiefly misled him.

"But (says Mr. Locke) is a particle, none more familiar in our language; and he that says it is a discretive conjunction, and that it answers sed in Latin, or MAIS in French*, thinks ^{*} It does not answer to sed in Latin, or mais in French; except only when it is used for BOT. Nor will any one word in any language answer to our En-he has sufficiently explained it. But it seems to me to intimate several relations the mind gives to the several propositions or parts of them, which it joins by this monosyllable.

" First,—'Bur to say no more:'

"Here it intimates a stop of the mind, in the course it was going, before it came to the end of it.

"Secondly,-- 'I saw BUT two plants:'

- "Here it shows, that the mind limits the sense to what is expressed, with a negation of all other.
- "Thirdly,—'You pray; But it is not that God would bring you to the true religion:'

"Fourthly,--- Bur that he would confirm you in your own."

- "The first of these BUTS intimates a supposition in the mind of something otherwise than it should be: the latter shews, that the mind makes a direct opposition between that and what goes before it.
- "Fifthly,—'All animals have sense, Bur a dog is an animal.'

"Here it signifies little more, but that the latter proposition is joined to the former, as the minor of a syllogism.

"To these, I doubt not, might be added a great many other significations of this particle, if it were my business to examine it in its full latitude, and consider it in all the places it is to be found; which if one should do, I doubt whether in all those manners it is made use of, it would deserve the title of discretive which grammarians give to it.

"But I intend not here a full explication of this sort of signs. The instances I have given in this one, may give occasion to reflect upon their use and force in language, and lead us into the contemplation of several actions of our minds in discoursing, which it has found a way to intimate to others by these particles, some whereof constantly, and others in certain constructions, have the sense of a whole sentence contained in them."

glish BUT: because a similar corruption in the same instance has not happened in any other language.

^{* &}quot;Essentiam finemque conjunctionum satis apte explicatum puto: nunc

Now all these difficulties are very easily to be removed without any effort of the understanding: and for that very reason I do not much wonder that Mr. Locke missed the explanation: for he dug too deep for it. But that the etymologists (who only just turn up the surface) should miss it, does indeed astonish me. It seems to me impossible that any man who reads only the most common of our old English authors should fail to observe it.

Gawin Douglas, notwithstanding he frequently confounds the two words and uses them improperly, does yet (without being himself aware of the distinction, and from the mere force of customary speech) abound with so many instances and so contrasted, as to awaken, one should think, the most inattentive reader.

The glossarist of Douglas contents himself with explaining nor by nur.

The glossarist to Urry's edition of Chaucer, says,—BOT for BUT is "a form of speech frequently used in Chaucer to denote the greater certainty of a thing."—This is a most inexcusable assertion: for, I believe, the place cited in the Glossary is the only instance (in this edition of Chaucer) where BOT is used; and there is not the smallest shadow of reason for forming even a conjecture in favour of this unsatisfactory assertion: unsatisfactory, even if the fact had been so; because it contains no explanation: for why should BOT denote greater certainty?

And here it may be proper to observe, that Gawin Douglas's language (where Bot is very frequently found), though written about a century after, must yet be esteemed more antient than Chaucer's: even as at this day the present English speech in Scotland is, in many respects, more antient than that spoken in England so far back as the reign of Queen Elizabeth*. So Mer. Casaubon, (de Vet. Ling. Ang.) says of his time,—"Scotica lingua Anglica hodierna purior."—Where, by purior, he means nearer to the Anglo-Saxon.

So G. Hickes, in his Anglo-Saxon Grammar (chap. 3.) says, —"Scoti in multis Saxonizantes."

But to return to Mr. Locke, whom (as B. Jenson says of Shakespeare) "I reverence on this side of idolatry;" in the five instances which he has given for five different meanings of the word But, there are indeed only two different meanings to nor could he, as he imagined he could, have added any other significations of this particle, but what are to be found in Bot and But as I have explained them ‡.

^{*} This will not seem at all extraordinary if you reason directly contrary to Lord Monboddo on this subject; by doing which you will generally be right as well in this as in almost every thing else which he has advanced.

^{† &}quot;You must answer, that she was brought very near the fire, and as good as thrown in; or else that she was provoked to it by a divine inspiration. But, But that another divine inspiration moved the beholders to believe that she did therein a noble act, this act of hers might have been calumniated," &c.—
Donne's Beadavaros, part 2. distinct. 5. sect. 8.

In the above passage, which is exceedingly awkward, BUT is used in both its meanings close to each other: and the impropriety of the corruption appears therefore in its most offensive point of view. A careful author would avoid this, by placing these two BUTS at a distance from each other in the sentence, or by changing one of them for some other equivalent word. Whereas had the corruption not taken place, he might without any inelegance (in this respect) have kept the construction of the sentence as it now stands: for nothing would have offended us, had it run thus,—"Bot, butan that another divine inspiration moved the beholders," &c.

¹ S. Johnson, in his Dictionary, has numbered up eighteen different signi-

But, in the first, third, fourth, and fifth instances, is corruptly put for not, the imperative of Botan:

In the second instance only it is put for Bute, or Butan, or Be-utan*.

In the first instance,—"To say no more," is a mere parenthesis: and Mr. Locke has unwarily attributed to BUT, the meaning contained in the parenthesis: for suppose the instance had been this,—"BUT, to proceed." Or this,—"BUT, to go fairly thro' this matter." Or this,—"BUT, not to stop."

Does BUT in any of these instances intimate a stop of the mind in the course it was going? The truth is, that BUT itself is the furthest of any word in the language from "intimating a stop." On the contrary it always intimates something MORE; something to follow: (as indeed it does in this very instance of Mr. Locke's; though we know not what that something is, because the sentence is not completed). And therefore whenever any one in discourse finishes his words with BUT, the question always follows—BUT what?—

So that Shakespeare speaks most truly as well as poetically, when he gives an account of BUT, very different from this of Mr. Locke:

fications (as he imagines) of BUT: which however are all reducible to Ba, and Be-utan.

• "I saw BUT two plants."

Not or Ne is here left out and understood, which used formerly to be always inserted, as it frequently is still.

So Chaucer—"I ne usurpe not to have founden this werke of my labour or of myne engin. In ame But a leude compilatour of the laboure of old astrologiens, and have it translated in myn Englishe. And with this sweete shall I sleene envy."—Introduction to Conclusions of the Astrologies.

We should now say—"I am but a leude compilatour," &cc.

† In the French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, Dutch, and several other dead and living languages, the very word MORE is used for this conjunction.

BUT.

The French language anciently used mais not only as they now do for the conjunction mais, but also as they now use plus.

Long. What's next?

Speed. And more faults than hairs.

Laux. That's monstrous! Oh that that were out!

Here the word BUT allays the bad precedent; for which, without any shifting of its own intrinsic signification, it is as well qualified as to allay the good.

† 80 Tasso,-

"Am. — Oh, che mi dici?

that follows. For Botan means—to boot*, i. e. to superadd †, to supply, to substitute, to compensate with, to remedy with, to make amends with, to add something more in order to make up a deficiency in something else.

So likewise in the third and fourth instances, (taken from Chillingworth) ‡. Mr. Locke has attributed to BUT, a meaning which can only be collected from the words which follow it.

But Mr. Locke says,—"If it were his business to examine it (BUT) in its full latitude:"——and that he—"intends not here a full explication of this sort of signs."—And yet he adds, that—"the instances he has given in this one (BUT) may lead worth observing; and the reason evident, why in the question consequent to the conjunction, what is placed after the one, but before the other.

Bost what?
But what?
What more?
Che Ma?

* S. Johnson, and others, have mistaken the expression—To Boot—(which still remains in our language) for a substantive; which is indeed the infinitive of the same verb of which the conjunction is the imperative.

† "Perhaps it may be thought improper for me to address you on this subject. But a moment, my Lords, and it will evidently appear that you are equally blameable for an omission of duty here also."

This may be supposed an abbreviation of construction, for "But indulge me with a moment, my Lords, and it will," &c.; but there is no occasion for such a supposition.

‡ Knott had said,—"How can it be in us a fundamental errour to say, the Scripture alone is not judge of controversies, seeing (notwithstanding this our belief) we use for interpreting of Scripture, all the means which they prescribe: as prayer, conferring of places, consulting the originals," &c.

To which Chillingworth replies,

"You pray, BUT it is not that God would bring you to the true religion, BUT that he would confirm you in your own. You confer places, BUT it is that you may confirm, or colour over with plausible disguises your erroneous doctrines; not that you may judge of them, and forsake them, if there be reason for it. You consult the originals, BUT you regard them not when they make against your doctrine or translation."

In all these places, BUT (i. c. BOT, or as we now pronounce that verb Boot) only directs something to be added or supplied in order to make up some deficiency in Knott's expressions of "prayer, conferring of places," &c. And so far indeed as an omission of something is improper, BUT (by ordering its insertion) may be said to "intimate a supposition in the mind of the speaker of something otherwise than it should be." But that intimation is only, as you see, by consequence; and not by the intrinsic signification of the word BUT.

us into the contemplation of several actions of our minds in discoursing which it has found a way to intimate to others by these particles." And these, it must be remembered, are actions, or, as he before termed them, Thoughts of our minds, for which, he has said, we have "either none or very deficient names."

Now if it had been so, (which in truth it is not,) it was surely, for that reason, most especially the business of an Essay on human Understanding to examine these signs in their full latinude: and to give a full explication of them. Instead of which, neither here, nor elsewhere, has Mr. Locke given any explication whatever.

Though I have said much, I shall also omit much which might be added in support of this double etymology of BUT: nor should I have dwelt so long upon it but in compliment to Mr. Locke; whose opinions in any matter are not slightly to be rejected, nor can they be modestly controverted without very strong arguments.

None of the etymologists have been aware of this corrupt use of one word for two *.

Minshew, keeping only one half of our modern BUT in contemplation, has sought for its derivation in the Latin imperative Puta.

Vossius is indeed a great authority; but, when he has nothing to justify an useless conjecture but a similarity of sound, we ought not to be afraid of opposing an appearance of reason to him.

It is contrary to the customary progress of corruption in words to derive AST from AT. Words do not gain, but lose letters in their progress: nor has unaccountable accident any share in their corruption; there is always a good reason to be given for every change they receive: and, by a good reason, I do not mean those cabalistical words Metathesis, Epenthesis, &c., by which ^{*} Nor have etymologists been any more aware of the meaning or true derivation of the words corresponding with BUT in other languages. Vossius derives the Latin conjunction AT from $\alpha \tau \alpha \zeta$; and AST from AT, "inserto s." (But how or why s happens to be inserted, he does not say.) Now to what purpose is such sort of etymology? Suppose it was derived from this doubtful word $\alpha \tau \alpha \zeta$,—what intelligence does this give us? Why not as well stop at the Latin word AT, as at the Greek word $\alpha \tau \alpha \zeta$? Is it not such sort of trifling etymology (for I will not give even that name to what is said by Scaliger and Nunnesius concerning SED) which has brought all etymological inquiry into disgrace?

Junius confines his explanation to the other half; which he calls its "primariam significationem."

And Skinner, willing to embrace them both, found no better method to reconcile two contradictory meanings, than to say hardily that the transition from one * to the other + was—"LEVI FLEXU!"

Junius says—"BUT, Chaucero T. c. v. 194. bis positum pro Sine. Primus locus est in summo columnæ—'BUT temperaunce in tene.'—Alter est in columnæ medio;

This golden carte with firy bemes bright

But videtur dictum quasi Be-ut, pro quo Angli dicunt without: unde quoque, hujus derivationis intuitu, præsens hujus particulæ acceptio videbitur ostendere hanc esse primariam ejus significationem."

The extreme carelessness and ignorance of Junius, in this article, is wonderful and beneath a comment.

Skinner says,—" BUT, ut ubi dicimus—None BUT he;—

etymologists work such miracles; but at least a probable or anatomical reason for those not arbitrary operations.

Adsit, Adst, Ast, At.

I am not at all afraid of being ridiculed for the above derivation, by any one who will give himself the trouble to trace the words (corresponding with But) of any language to their source: though they should not all be quite so shvious as the French Mais, the Italian Ma, the Spanish Mas, or the Dutch Maar.

• Id est, a direction to leave out something.

WITHOUT.

But (as distinguished from Bot) and WITHOUT have both exactly the same meaning; that is, in modern English, neither more nor less than Be-out.

And they were both originally used indifferently either as conjunctions or prepositions. But later writers, having adopted the false notions and distinctions of language maintained by the Greek and Latin grammarians, have successively endeavoured to make the English language conform more and more to the same rules. Accordingly without, in approved modern speech, is now intirely confined to the office of a Preposition*; and But is generally (though not always) used as a Conjunction. In the same manner as Nisi and Sine in Latin are distributed; which do both likewise mean exactly the same, with no other difference than that, in the former the negation precedes, and in the other it follows the verb.

Skinner only says,—" without, ab A.S. widutan, extra."

S. Johnson makes it a preposition, an adverb, and a conjunction; and under the head of a Conjunction, says,—"without, Conjunct. Unless; if not; except.—Not in use."

Its true derivation and meaning are the same as those of But (from Butan).

It is nothing but the imperative pynonutan, from the Anglo-Saxon and Gothic verb Peonoan, VAIKWAN; which in the Anglo-Saxon language is incorporated with the verb Beon, esse.

^{*} It is however used as a conjunction by Lord Mansfield, in Horne's Trial, page 56. "It cannot be read, WITHOUT the Attorney-General consents to it."

And yet, if this reverend Earl's authority may be safely quoted for any thing, it must be for words. It is so unsound in matter of law, that it is frequently rejected even by himself.

AND.

M. Casaubon supposes AND to be derived from the Greek ειτα, postea.

Skinner says—"Nescio an a Lat. addere, q.d. Add; interjecta per epenthesin N, ut in render, a reddendo."

Lye supposes it to be derived from the Greek $71, adhuc, præterea, etiam, quinetiam, insuper.

I have already given the derivation, which, I believe, will alone stand examination.

I shall only remark here, how easily men take upon trust, how willingly they are satisfied with, and how confidently they repeat after others, false explanations of what they do not understand.—Conjunctions, it seems, are to have their denomination and definition from the use to which they are applied: per accidens, essentiam. Prepositions connect words; but—"the Conjunction connects or joins together sentences; so as out of two to make one sentence. Thus—"You and I, and Peter, rode to London," is one sentence made up of three," &c.

Well! So far matters seem to go on very smoothly. It is, "You rode, I rode, Peter rode."

But let us now change the instance, and try some others which are full as common, though not altogether so convenient.

Two AND Two are four.

AB and BC and CD form a triangle.

John AND Jane are a handsome couple.

Does AB form a triangle, BC form a triangle? &c.—Is John a couple? Is Jane a couple?—Are two, four?

If the definition of a conjunction is adhered to, I am afraid that AND, in such instances, will appear to be no more a conjunction, (that is, a connecter of sentences) than Though, in the instance I have given under that word: or than But, in Mr. Locke's second instance; or than Else, when called by S. Johnson a Pronoun; or than Since, when used for Sithence or for Sine. In short I am afraid that the grammarians will scarcely have an entire conjunction left: for I apprehend that there is not one of those words which they call conjunctions, which is not sometimes used (and that very properly) without connecting sentences.

LEST.

Junius only says—"Lest, least, minimus. v. little." Under Least, he says—"Least, lest, minimus. Contractum est ex ελαχιστος. v. little, parvus." And under Little, to which he refers us, there is nothing to the purpose.

Skinner says-"LEST, ab A. S. Lær, minus, q. d. quo minus hoc fiat."

S. Johnson says,—"Lest, Conj. (from the adjective Least)
That not."

This last deduction is a curious one indeed; and it would puzzle as sagacious a reasoner as S. Johnson to supply the middle steps to his conclusion from Least, (which always however means some) to "That not" (which means none at all). It seems as if, when he wrote this, he had already in his mind a presentiment of some future occasion in which such reasoning would be convenient. As thus,—"The mother country, the seat of government, must necessarily enjoy the greatest share of dignity, power, rights, and privileges: an united or associated kingdom must have in some degree a smaller share: and their colonies the least share;"—That is (according to S. Johnson)* None of any kind.

It has been proposed by no small authority (Wallis followed by Lowth) to alter the spelling of Lest to Least; and vice versa. "Multi," says Wallis, "pro Lest scribunt Least (ut distinguatur a conjunctione Lest, ne, ut non:) Verum omnino contra analogiam grammaticæ. Mallem ego adjectivum lest, conjunctionem least scribere."

"The superlative Least," says Lowth, "ought rather to be written without the A; as Dr. Wallis hath long ago observed. The Conjunction of the same sound might be written with the A, for distinction."

S. Johnson judiciously dissents from this proposal, but for ^{*} Johnson's merit ought not to be denied to him; but his Dictionary is the most imperfect and faulty, and the least valuable of any of his productions; and that share of merit which it possesses makes it by so much the more hurtful. I rejoice however that, though the least valuable, he found it the most profitable: for I could never read his Preface without shedding a tear.

no other reason, but because he thinks,—"the profit is not worth the change."

Now though they all concur in the same etymology, I will venture to affirm that Lest, for Lesed, (as blest for, blessed, &c.) is nothing else but the participle past of Legan, dimittere; and, with the article That (either expressed or understood) means no more than Hoc dimisso or Quo dimisso.

And, if this explanation and etymology of LEST is right (of which I have not the smallest doubt) it furnishes one caution more to learned critics, not to innovate rashly: Lest, whilst they attempt to amend a language, as they imagine, in one triffing respect, they mar it in others of more importance; and, by their corrupt alterations and amendments, confirm error, and make the truth more difficult to be discovered by those who come after.

Mr. Locke says, and it is agreed on all sides, that—"it is in the right use of these (Particles) that more particularly consists the clearness and beauty of a good stile," and that "these words, which are not truly by themselves the names of any ideas, are of constant and indispensable use in language; and do much contribute to men's well expressing themselves."

Now this, I am persuaded, would never have been said, had these particles been understood: for it proceeds from nothing but the difficulty of giving any rule or direction concerning their use: and that difficulty arises from a mistaken supposition that they are not "by themselves, the names of any ideas;" and in that case indeed I do not see how any rational rules concerning their use could possibly be given. But I flatter myself that henceforward, the true force and nature of these words being clearly understood, the proper use of them will be so evident that any rule concerning their use will be totally unnecessary: as it would be thought absurd to inform any one that when he means to direct an addition, he should not use a word which directs to take away.

I am induced to mention this in this place, from the very improper manner in which LEST (more than any other conjunction) is often used by our best authors: those who are most conversant with the learned languages being most likely.

and crooked arts as these to blast my reputation, and to possess men's minds with disaffection to my person; lest peradventure, they might with some indifference hear reason from me."—Chillingworth's Preface to the Author of Charity maintained, &c.

Here LEST is well used,—"You make use of these arts:"
—Why? The reason follows,—Leped that, i. e. Hoc dimisso,—"men might hear reason from me."—Therefore,— you use these arts.

Instances of the improper use of LEST may be found in almost every author that ever wrote in our language; because mone of them have been aware of the true meaning of the word; and have been misled by supposing it to be perfectly correspondent to some conjunctions in other languages, which it is not.

Thus Ascham, in his Scholemaster, says,—"If a yong jentleman will venture himselfe into the companie of ruffians, it is over great a jeopardie, LEST their facions, maners, thoughts, taulke, and deedes will verie sone be over like."

Any tolerable judge of English will immediately perceive something awkward and improper in this sentence; though, he cannot tell why. Yet the reason will be very plain to him, when he knows the meaning of these unmeaning particles (as they have been called): for he will then see at once that LEST has no business in the sentence; there being nothing dimisso, in consequence of which something else would follow; and that, if he would employ LEST, the sentence must be arranged otherwise.

As,—"Let not a young gentleman venture, &c. LEST his manners, thoughts," &c.

SINCE.

Since is a very corrupt abbreviation; confounding together different words and different combinations of words: and is therefore in modern English improperly made (like But) to serve purposes which no one word in any other language can answer; because the same accidental corruptions, arising from similarity of sound, have not happened in the correspondent words of any other language.

Where we now employ sincz, was formerly (according to its respective signification) used,

Sometimes,

1. Seoddan, Sioddan, Seddan, Siddan, Sidden, Sither, Sithere, Sith

Sometimes,

- 2. Syne, Sine, Sene, Sen, Syn, Sin: Sometimes,
- 3. Seand, Seeing, Seeing-that, Seeing-as, Sens, Sense, Sence: Sometimes,
- 4. Sidde, Sid, Sithe, Sith, Seen-that, Seen-as, Sens, Sense, Sence.

Accordingly SINCE, in modern English, is used four ways. Two, as a preposition, connecting (or rather affecting) words: and Two, as a conjunction, affecting sentences.

When used as a preposition, it has always the signification either of the past participle Seen joined to thence, (that is, seen and thence forward:)—Or else it has the signification of the past participle Seen only.

When used as a conjunction, it has sometimes the signification of the present participle Seeing or Seeing-that; and sometimes the signification of the past participle Sees or Seen-that.

As a preposition,

- . 1. Since (for Siddan, Sithence, or Seen and thence forward); as,
- "Such a system of government as the present, has not been ventured on by any king since the expulsion of James the Second."
 - 2. Since (for Syne, Sene, or Seen); as, ...
- "Did George the Third reign before or SINCE that example?"

As a conjunction;

- 3. Since (for Seand, Seeing, Seeing-as, or Seeing-that:)
 —as,
- "If I should labour for any other satisfaction but that of my own mind, it would be an effect of phrenzy in me, not of hope;

since it is not truth, but opinion, that can travel the world without a passport."

4. Since (for Sidde, Sith, Seen-as, or Seen-that);—as,

"Since death in the end takes from all, whatsoever fortune or force takes from any one; it were a foolish madness in the shipwreck of worldly things, where all sinks but the sorrow, to save that."

Junius says,—"Since that time, Exinde. Contractum est ex Angl. Sith thence, q. d. sero post: ut Sith illud originem traxerit ex illo SEIΦ11, Sero; quod habet Arg. Cod."

Skinner says,—"SINCE, a Teut. Sint, Belg. Sind, Post, postea, postquam. Doct. Th. H. putat deflexum a nostro Sithence. Non absurdum etiam esset declinare a Lat. Exhinc, E et H abjectis, et x facillima mutatione in s transeunte." Again he says,—"SITH ab A.S. SISSan, SySSan. Belg. Seyd, Sint, Post, post illa, postea."

After the explanation I have given, I suppose it unnecessary to point out the particular errors of the above derivations.

Sithence and Sith, though now obsolete, continued in good 'use down even to the time of the Stuarts.

Hooker in his writings uses Sithence, Sith, Seeing, and Since. The two former he always properly distinguishes; using Sithence for the true import of the Anglo-Saxon Siddan, and Sith for the true import of the Anglo-Saxon Sidde. Which is the more extraordinary, because authors of the first credit had very long before Hooker's time, confounded them together; and thereby led the way for the present indiscriminate and corrupt use of since in all the four cases mentioned.

Seeing Hooker uses sometimes, perhaps, (for it will admit a doubt) improperly. And Since (according to the corrupt custom which has now universally prevailed in the language) he uses indifferently either for Sithence, Seen, Seeing, or Sith.

THAT.

There is something so very singular in the use of this Conjunction, as it is called, that one should think it would alone, if attended to, have been sufficient to lead the Grammarians to a knowledge of most of the other conjunctions, as well as of itself.—The use I mean is, that the conjunction THAT generally makes a part of, and keeps company with most of the other conjunctions.—If that, An that, Unless that, Though that, But that, Without that, Lest that, Since that, Save that, Except that, &c. is the construction of most of the sentences where any of those conjunctions are used.

Is it not an obvious question then, to ask, why this conjunction alone should be so peculiarly distinguished from all the rest of the same family? And why this alone should be able to connect itself with, and indeed be usually necessary to almost all the others? So necessary, that even when it is compounded with another conjunction, and drawn into it so as to become one word, (as it is with sith and since,) we are still forced to employ again this necessary index, in order to precede and so point out the sentence which is to be affected by the other conjunction?

De, in the Anglo-Saxon, meaning THAT, it will easily he perceived that sith (which is no other than the Anglo-Saxon probe) includes That. But when since is (as I here consider it) a corruption for seeing-as and seen-as, I may be asked; how does it then include THAT?—In short, what is As? For we can gather no more from the etymologists concerning it, than that it is derived either from ω_c or from Als*: but still this explains nothing: for what ω_c is, or Als, remains likewise a secret.

The truth is, that as is also an Article; and (however and whenever used in English) means the same as It, or Thet, or Which. In the German, where it still evidently retains its original signification and use, (as So also does) it is written Es.

It does not come from Als; any more than Though, and Be-it, and If (or Gif), &c.; come from Although, and Albeit, and Algif, &c.—For Als, in our old English, is a contraction of Al and Es or As: and this Al (which in comparisons used to be very properly employed before the first es or as, but was not employed before the second) we now, in modern English, suppress. As we have also done in numberless other instances, where All, though not improper, is not necessary. Thus,

^{*} Junius says,—" As, ut, sicut, Græcis est ws." Skinner, whom S. Johnson follows, says—" As a Teut. Als, sicut, eliso, scil. propter euphoniam, intermedio L."

"She glides away under the foamy seas,
As swift as darts or feather'd arrows fly."

That is,

"She glides away (with) THAT swiftness, (with) which feather'd arrows fly."

When in old English it is written,

"She ——— Glidis away under the fomy seis, ALS swift As ganze or fedderit arrow fleis."

Then it means,

"With ALL THAT swiftness, with WHICH, &c."

And now I hope I may for this time take my leave of Etymology; for which I confess myself to be but very slenderly qualified. Nor should I have even sought for those derivations which I have given, if reflection had not first directed me where to seek, and convinced me that I was sure easily to find them. Nor, having found them in one language only, should I have relied on that particular instance alone on which to build a general conclusion of the proof in fact. But I am confirmed in my opinion by having found the same method of explanation successful in many other languages; and as I have before said, I know, a priori, that it must be so in all languages.

After what I have said, you will see plainly why so many of the conjunctions may be used almost indifferently (or with a very little turn of expression) for each other. And without my entering into the particular minutise in the use of each, you will easily account for the slight differences in the turn of expression, arising from different customary abbreviations of construction.

I will only give you one instance, and leave it with you for your entertainment: from which you will draw a variety of arguments and conclusions.

"And soft he sighed, ELSE men might him hear.
And soft he sighed, ELSE men might him hear.
Unless he sighed soft, men might him hear.
But that he sighed soft, men might him hear.
Without he sighed soft, men might him hear.
Save that he sighed soft, men might him hear.
Except he sighed soft, men might him hear.
Out-cept he sighed soft, men might him hear.
Out-take he sighed soft, men might him hear.
If that he sighed not soft, men might him hear.
And an he sigh'd not soft, men might him hear.
Set that he sigh'd not soft, men might him hear.

According to this account which I have given of the Conjunctions (and which may also be given of the Prepositions) Lord Monboddo will appear extremely unfortunate in the particular care he has taken (part 2. book 1. c. 15.) to make an exception from the general rule he lays down (of the Verb's being the parent word of the whole language), and to caution the candid reader from imputing to him an opinion, that the Conjunctions were intended by him to be included in his rule; or had any connexion whatever with Verbs.

"This so copious derivation from the Verb in Greek, naturally leads one (says he) to suspect that it is the Parent word of the whole language: and indeed I believe that to be the fact. For I do not know that it can be certainly shewn that there is any word that is undoubtedly a Primitive, which is not a Verb; I mean a verb in the stricter sense and common acceptation of the word.—By this the candid reader will not understand that I mean to say that prepositions, conjunctions, and such like words, which are rather the pegs and nails that fasten the several parts of the language together, than the language itself, are derived from Verbs, or are derivatives of any kind."

Indeed, in my opinion, he is not less unfortunate in his Rade than in his Exception. They are both equally unfounded: and yet as well founded as almost every other position which he has laid down in his two first volumes. The whole of which is perfectly worthy of that profound politician and philosopher, who (vol. i. p. 243.) esteems that to be the most perfect form, and, as he calls it, "the last stage of civil society," where Government leaves nothing to the free-will of individuals, but interferes with the domestic, private lives of the citizens, and the education of their children! Such would in truth be the last stage of civil society, in the sense of the lady in the comedy, whose lover having offered—"to give her the last proof of love, and marry her;"—she aptly replied—"the last indeed: for there's an end of loving."—

But what shall we say to the bitter irony with which Mr. Harris treats the moderns in the concluding note to his doctrine of Conjunctions? Where he says,—"It is somewhat surprising that the politest and most elegant of the Attic writers, and Plato above all the rest, should have their works filled with particles of all kinds and with conjunctions in particular; while in the modern polite works, as well of ourselves as of our neighbours, scarce such a word as a particle or conjunction is to be found. Is it that where there is connection in the meaning there must be words had to connect; but that where the connection is little or none, such connectives are of little use? That houses of cards, without cement, may well answer their end, but not those houses where one would chuse to dwell? Is this the cause? Or have we attained an elegance to the antients unknown?

"Venimus ad summam Fortunæ," &c.

I say, that a little more reflection and a great deal less reading, a little more attention to common sense * and less blind prejudice for his Greek commentators, would have made him a much better grammarian, if not perhaps a philosopher.—What a strange language is this to come from a man, who at the same time supposes these particles and conjunctions to be words without meaning! It should seem by this insolent pleasantry that Mr. Harris reckons it the perfection of composition and discourse to use a great many words without meaning! If

^{*} The author would by no means be thought to allude to the common sense of Doctors Oswald, Reid, and Beattie; which appears to him to be sheer nonsense.

so, perhaps Slender's language would meet with this learned gentleman's approbation.—

"I keep but three men and a boy yet till my mother be dead; But what though yet I live a poor gentlemen born."

Now here is cement enough in proportion to the building. It is plain however that Shakespeare (a much better philosopher by the bye than most of those who have written philosophical treatises) was of a very different opinion in this matter from Mr. Harris. He thought the best way to make his zany talk unconnectedly and nonsensically, was to give him a quantity of these beautiful words without meaning, which are such favourites with Mr. Harris.

I shall be told, that this may be raillery perhaps, but that it is neither reasoning nor authority: that this instance does not affect Mr. Harris: for that all cement is no more fit to make a firm building than no cement at all: that Slender's discourse might have been made equally as unconnected without any particles, as with so many together: and that it is the proper mixture of particles and other words which Mr. Harris would recommend; and that he only censures the moderns for being too sparing of particles.—To which I answer, that reasoning disdains to be employed about such affected airs of superiority and pretended elegance. But he shall have authority, if he pleases, his favourite authority; an antient, a Greek, and one too writing professedly on Plato's opinions, and in defence of Plato; and which, if Mr. Harris had not forgotten, I am persuaded he would not have comtradicted. He says,—"Il n'y a ny beste, ny instrument, ny armeure, ny autre chose quelle qu'elle soit au monde, qui par ablation ou privation d'une siene propre partie, soit plus belle, plus active, ne plus doulce que paravant elle n'estoit, là où l'oraison bien souvent, en estans les Conjonctions toutes ostées, a une force et efficace plus affectueuse, plus active, et plus esmouvante. C'est pourquoy ceulx qui escrivent des figures de retorique louent et prisent grandement celle qu'ils appellent deliée; là où ceulx cy qui sont trop religieux et qui s'assubjettissent trop aux regles de la grammaire, sans ozer oster une seule conjonction de la commune façon de parler, en sont à bon droit blasmez et repris, comme faisans un stile enervé, sans aucune pointe d'affection, et qui lasse et donne peine à ouir*."

And I hope this authority (for I will offer no argument to a writer of his cast) will satisfy the—"true taste and judgement in writing" of Lord Monboddo; who with equal affectation and vanity has followed Mr. Harris in this particular; and who, though incapable of writing a sentence of common English, really imagines that there is something captivating in his stile, and has gratefully informed us to whose assistance we owe the obligation.

If these two gentlemen, whom I have last mentioned, should be capable of receiving any mortification from the censure of one who professes himself an admirer of the—" vulgar and unlearned" Mr. Locke, I will give them the consolution of acknowledging that a real grammarian and philosopher, J. C. Scaliger, has even exceeded them in this mistake concerning the Particles: for he not only maintains the same doctrine which they have adopted; but even attempts to give reasons, a priori, why it is and must be so.

If the generous and grateful (not candid) reader should think that I have treated them with too much asperity, to him I owe some justification. Let him recollect, then, the manner in which these gentlemen and the Common Sense Doctors have treated the 'vulgar, unlearned, and atheistical' Mr. Locke (for such are the imputations they cast upon that benefactor to his country); and let him condemn me, if he can.

And thus, Sir, have I finished what I at first proposed; namely, to prove that in the information against Lawley there was not the smallest literal omission. In the elucidation of this I have been compelled to enter into a minute disquisition

^{*} Though the sound of the Greek would be more pleasing to Mr. Harris, I quote the bishop of Auxerre's translation; because I have not the original with me in prison. At the same time it gives me an opportunity to remind their Lordships the Bishops of our days, of the language which that virtuous Prelate held to a Sovereign of France; that, instead of being ready on all occasions to vote for blood and slavery, they may, from that example, learn a little more of their duty to their country and mankind.

^{+ [}Oswald, Reid, and Beattie. See vol. i. page 265.—ED.]

of some mistaken words, which ignorance would otherwise have employed in order to render a very plain position, ridiculous. I shall not however expect to escape ridicule; for so very disgusting is this kind of inquiry to the generality, that I have often thought it was for mankind a lucky mistake (for it was a mistake) which Mr. Locke made when he called his book, an Essay on human Understanding. For some part of the inestimable benefit of that book has, merely on account of its title, reached to many thousands more than, I fear, it would have done, had he called it (what it is merely) a grammatical Essay, or a Treatise on Words or on Language. The human Mind, or the human Understanding, appears to be a grand and noble theme; and all men, even the most insufficient, conceive That to be a proper object of their contemplation; whilst inquiries into the nature of Language (through which alone they can obtain any knowledge beyond the beasts) are fallen into such extreme disrepute and contempt, that even those who "neither have the accent of christian, pagan, or man," nor can speak so many words together with as much propriety as Balaam's Ass did, do yet imagine Words to be infinitely beneath the concern of their exalted understandings! Let these gentlemen enjoy their laugh. I shall however be very well satisfied if I do not meet with your disapprobation: and I have endeavoured studiously to secure myself from that, by avoiding to offend you with any the smallest compliment from the beginning to the end of this letter. It is not any to declare myself, with the greatest personal affection and esteem, your most obedient and obliged humble servant,

ADDENDA.

Vol. I. p. 491. Fire-new.

"Armado is a most illustrious wight,

A man of fire-new words, fashion's own knight."

Loves Labour's Lost, act. i. sc. 1.

Vol. II. p. 396. line 8. Add

"Gooseberry, n. s. [goose and berry, because eaten with young geese as sauce.]"—Johnson's Dictionary.

It is a corruption for Loppe berry. Loppe is a thornbush; so that it means, the berry of the thornbush. S. Johnson says "Gorse [Lopp, Saxon,] Furze; a thick prickly shrub that bears yellow flowers in winter." Skinner says "Goss or Gors; ab A.S. Leoppe, Loppe, erica."

Le-oppt, i. e. enraged, angry. Le-yppian, irritare. [Lye has zoppt, and zoppt-beam, rubus.—Edit.]

The Brackets in Vol. I. p. 349—367, do not, as elsewhere, denote new matter.

ERRATA.

- Vol. I. Page 203, line 13, for His, read This.

 Page 206, line 16, for ΥΛΙΚΟΛΝ, read ΥΛΙΚΦΛΝ.

 Page 451, line 23, for solo, read salo.
- Vol. II. Page 90, line 17, for KER, read KERS.

 Page 164, line 12, for Dlaro 13, read Dlaro-13.

In the first Edition, the following note accompanied the Errata:

The Blanks in many of the pages I must here place amongst the Errors of the printer: for the words which should supply those Blanks, were as fair, as true, as honest and as legal, as any other part of the book; and by them I should be very willing to stand or fall. He has printed for me thirty years, and never before hesitated at any word which I employed.
